ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 5, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 19th March; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 17th March.

TELEGRAPHING from Mandalay on the 2nd inst. the Correspondent of the Times gives the following intelligence:—

A large incendiary fire occurred last night in the southern portion of the town outside the walled city. A gang of about sixty dacoits attacked and attempted to loot a house in the town. The inmates resisted them pluckily. The sound of firing brought down the police. The dacoits, on being attacked by the police, fired the house to cover their retreat. The fire spread with great rapidity; two large blocks, comprising some 600 houses, were totally destroyed. A considerable proportion of the houses destroyed were mere huts. One dacoit was wounded and captured, and the gang was traced some distance to the east outside the town limits.

Lieutenant Cairns, R.E., has accurately surveyed the Irrawaddy from Bhamo to Mogoung, proving the impracticability of the Simbo and Mogoung rivers for steamers.

The troops at Bhamo are very healthy. In a force of 300 Europeans and 700 Sepoys there has been no death among the Europeans, and only three deaths from sickness among the Sepoys.

A Native of India has arrived at Bhamo from Dillhrogor (? Dib-roghur). He reached Mogoung in sixteen days, and was brought to Bhamo by Major Cooke, the Political Officer there. He gives a good description of the route.

The Kachyen Sawbawth or chiefs have been informed that no presents will be given them as under Burmese rule, nor will presents be expected or received from them; but that they are free to trade in Bhamo without hindrance.

The Burmese still refuse to sleep in Bhamo. They come to work in the town in the daytime, but at dusk they go to islands in the river for protection. Bhamo is well fortified.

GENERAL PRENDERGAST and his late Political Officer, Colonel Sladen, quitted Burma, the scene of their late military and political successes, yesterday.

FROM Afghanistan there is no news of importance. The Amcer's mother had died while on a pilgrimage.

It is satisfactory that time has been taken by the forelock in preparing for the Tibet Mission, which, under Mr. Colman Macaulay, with Mr. Paul as Secretary, Dr. Cunningham as Medical and Scientific Officer, an escort of the 13th Bengal Lancers, and, probably, an officer of the Survey Department, is to leave Darjeeling about the end of May. The route is to be through Sikhim to Shigatze, thence to Lhasa.

FROM Nepal it is reported that the young Maharajah is to be married next month to the daughter of the Rajah of an adjacent Himalayan State, and that great preparations are being made at Khatmandu to celebrate the event.

FROM Hong Kong we are told, under date 23rd ult., that the new Chinese Ambassador to England, Liu, left the port on that day. Advices from the same place, on the 31st, say:—

Shao Ta-jen, Taotai or Governor of Shanghai, has been appointed Chinese representative on the joint Commission which, under the Opium Convention of July last, is to arrange a method of preventing the smuggling of opium from this port into China, and thus remove the necessity for the so-called blockade of Hong Kong by Chinese revenue cruisers.

Shao is an experienced and liberal-minded official, and from his having served under the Marquis Tseng as First Secretary to the Chinese Legation in St. Petersburg, it is expected that he will do his utmost to bring the labours of the Commission to a satisfactory conclusion.

THE North-West Frontier is not being neglected by Sir F. Roberts, who, accompanied by Sir R. Sandeman, and escorted almost entirely by the local Belooch Sirdars and their tribesmen, reached Hurnai on Thursday. Sir F. Roberts is greatly pleased with the strength of the frontier, the loyal feeling and prosperity of the tribes, the peaceful state of the country, and the development of its resources. His route lay through the countries of the Khettran Muree and Kakar Pathan tribes to Thall Chotiali, and thence by way of Suambar, the Bori Valley, Sinjawi, and the Mehrab defile to Hurnai. The march from the Punjab—a distance of 310 miles—was accomplished in nine days, an average of thirty-four miles daily. Sir F. Roberts and Sir R. Sandeman intended to proceed to the Khojah Pass on the 31st of March.

THE Russian organ in Brussels, the Nord, gravely informs us that the mission of the envoy of the Emir of Bokhara, who is now so much fêted at St. Petersburg, is purely one of courtesy. Of course. It was an act of the merest courtesy, a pure feeling of meherbant, which induced the Empress of Russia to send shawls and jewels galore to the most influential lady in Merv, thereby, as we have already shown, securing its cession.

WE are sorry to see that the Maharajah Scindia has been for some time in a bad state of health. According to the latest reports there is no improvement in his condition. He is going to Bithoor, near Cawnpore, for the purpose of bathing in the Ganges, leaving the charge of his State to his Minister, Sir Gunput Rao.

CALCUTTA news, up to yesterday, comes from the Times' Correspondent, and presents nothing of great importance. The Begum of Bhopal, after a prolonged visit, had returned to her State. It is understood that her object was to obtain a reversal of orders of the Government of India degrading her husband, Mahomed Sadi Hossein, whose interference in Bhopal affairs has been the cause of the intolerable abuse and misgovernment which lately brought that State into discredit. The Indian Government has, however, stood firm, and refused to withdraw its orders. Sadi Hossein will no longer be permitted to take any part in the management of affairs, which are now placed on a constitutional basis, with a Mahomedan gentleman, who has long served the British Government in Bengal, as Premier.

THE Viceroy left Calcutta for Benares on the 30th, taking Durbhunga on his road. The Municipal Committee presented an address of welcome, in which grateful reference was made to Lady Dufferin's work on behalf of Indian women. The following day the Viceroy laid the foundation-stone of the Dufferin Hospital, which was the only public function that marked the visit. The party started early on Thursday morning for Benares.

AT Zamania, where the party halted, the Viceroy was treated to a novel experience. Here they were met by Maharajah Dumraon, who had a short conversation with the Viceroy, in the course of which his Highness thanked him for the peaceful settlement of the Afghan Frontier question, for the victory in Burma, and the peace and plenty now prevailing in India. The Viceroy replied that as the Maharajah thanked him for plenty, he should see that blame should not be laid on his shoulders if scarcity perchance followed. To this the Maharajah answered that, according to the Hindoo idea, as rulers deserved praise when plenty prevailed, they deserved blame when scarcity threatened!

WE are pleased indeed to find favourable harvest prospects reported from nearly every part of the country:—

According to the latest returns, the prospects of the wheat crop are generally favourable, and in some Provinces exceptionally so. Only in the Central Provinces have the prospects deteriorated, owing to the cloudy weather producing rust. A certain amount of rust is also reported from Bombay, but it has done no great injury. The harvest in Berar is almost completed, with an estimated outturn of 120,000 tons. A plentiful harvest is expected in all parts of the North-West Provinces and Oude, and the season promises well in the Punjab.

We are indebted to the United Service Gazette for the following official announcement of Dhuleep Singh's intended "apostacy." Our contemporary says:—

The following remarkable address to the Sikhs has just been sent to India by his Highness the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh:—"My beloved Countrymen,—It was not my intention ever to return to reside in India, but Sutgooroo, who governs all destiny and is more powerful than I, his erring creature, has caused circumstances to be so brought about that, against my will, I am compelled to quit England in order to occupy a humble sphere in India. I submit to his will, being persuaded that whatever is for the best will happen. I now, therefore, beg forgiveness of you, Khalsa Jee, or the Pure, for having forsaken the faith of my ancestors for a foreign religion; but I was very young when I embraced Christianity. It is my fond desire on reaching Bombay to take Pahul again, and I sincerely hope for your prayers to the Sutgooroo on that solemn occasion. But in returning to the faith of my ancestors, you must clearly understand, Khalsa Jee, that I have no intention of conforming to the errors introduced into Sikhism by those who were not true Sikhs, such, for instance, as wretched caste observances or abstinence from meats and drinks which Sutgooroo has ordained should be received with thankfulness by all mankind, but to worship in the pure and beautiful tenets of Baba Nanuk and obey the commands of the Gooroo Govind Singh. I am compelled to write this to you because I am not permitted to visit you in the Punjab, as I had much hoped to do. Truly a noble reward for my unwavering loyalty to the Empress of India. But Sutgooroo's will be done.—With Wah Gooroo jee ke Futteh, I remain, my beloved countrymen, your own flesh and blood, DHULEEP SINGH."

THE Native journals are still occupied with the Burmese Expedition, which it is apparently thought a smart thing to style the thirty lakhs' war. Most of the lucubrations are neither new nor interesting. We subjoin one only, dealing with the probable cost of the war:—

The whole of India, says the Amrita Bazaar Patrika, received the statement that the Burma war had cost only thirty lakhs with an incredulous smile, and, we believe, they can't be blamed if they receive a low estimate like that with suspicion. The conquest of a big and difficult country, inhabited by a free and independent people, was never accomplished in the nineteenth century with so small a cost, so the estimate very naturally appears low to the people of India. Besides, they very well remember how Lord Lytton congratulated himself upon the smallness of the cost of the Afghan war. But his estimate of two millions, as the cost of that war, eventually swelled into thirty or forty. It is not therefore quite unreasonable to suppose that the estimate of the Burman war would likewise undergo an eventual transformation like the seed of the acorn. Besides, everybody knows that the British officers and the British privates, though they fight like devils, are very tender creatures, and cost a good deal of money for their existence. One regiment of British soldiers requires four of camp-followers, while this camp-following is an institution not very well known in other parts of the world. The other Burma war cost India thirteen crores, though wars were managed in those old days of the Company with far greater economy than now. Is it therefore unreasonable on the part of the people to disbelieve the statement that the present war has cost only a few lakhs of rupees?

The Navamedini tells us:—

The Bombay Presidency has begun an agitation against the increase of military expenditure. India is really becoming impoverished on account of the increase in the cost of the army, and steps should be taken to reduce it. Mere protests from Bombay will not do, memorials ought to be submitted to Government from all parts of the country. We hope that Bengal and Madras will act in harmony with Bombay on this question.

The determination, announced by the Viceroy, not for the present to sanction the enrolment of Native volunteers comes in for a good deal of unfavourable comment:—

The Rast Gofar says that Lord Dufferin, in his reply to the addresses given to him by some of the public bodies of Madras, has, with his usual diplomacy, and in sweet and soft language, denied to the Natives the privilege of joining the Volunteer Corps in this country. He has praised the Natives for making such a demand, and has also extolled their loyalty, and yet in the same breath has denied them this much-coveted privilege. When the same request was made a few months ago to the Viceroy, he promised to bestow his best consideration upon the question, and the people accordingly looked forward with some hope of success to his future announcement on the subject. His sweet and "aërial" words, says the paper, on the present occasion have caused great disappointment, particularly as the Viceroy has not stated his objections to allowing the Natives to join the Volunteer Corps.

The Bombay Samachar expresses its great disappointment at the statement made by Lord Dufferin in respect of the request made by the Natives of this country to allow them to join the Volunteer Corps. Lord Dufferin's reply, the paper says, tends to show that Government have reasons to distrust the Natives from joining the Volunteer Corps. The people, it says, should not, so long as the career of Lord Dufferin lasts in this country, hope to obtain the coveted privilege. It would not be wrong if the people were also to abandon hopes of any new rights or privileges being conferred upon them by the present Viceroy.

On this topic the Sabodha Patrika has some sensible remarks:—

We are grateful (says this journal) to know that the offer was spoken of in sympathetic terms, and are far from sorry to know that both sides of the question were laid before Her Majesty's Government, but we are afraid that when the enrolment of a large number of Native volunteer regiments is held up to that Government as a thing difficult to manage and not worth the trouble, the sympathy and the consideration given to the question cannot be deemed as having done us any good or brought the question nearer solution, and yet, we take it, the question must be solved sooner or later. For we hope we shall not be told that while the ignorant Native is trained and hired and armed as a fighting man, the educated and respectable classes cannot be permitted to be members of the country militia? Why should the ghost of a "large number" of "Native volunteer regiments" be conjured into existence at once, and held up as a scarecrow to the Home authorities? Like all other reforms in the Indian Administration, why should not this one have its beginning, and why, until the scheme is tried, should the numbers be not kept down by regulations and tests, calculated to obviate all possible difficulties? What is it that qualifies and even renders welcome the Eurasians and Native Christians and disqualifies the rest of the Natives? Why, again, are Europeans of all countries and even West Indians welcomed, and are the Natives of India alone to be regarded as unfit or inconvenient?

NOR have our Native contemporaries had their last word anent the Royal Commission. After quoting the Mahratta, the Indian Spectator gives us its own opinion on the point:—

The truth at the bottom is (it says), that the advisers of H.M.'s Government are (1) unwilling that the past administration of India by the servants of the Crown should be searchingly reviewed by an independent, but mixed, tribunal; and (2) mightily afraid lest that tribunal should recommend a radical change which in effect may undermine, if not totally destroy, the potentiality of that huge bureaucracy, which has so long tasted the pleasures of place and power at the expense of the dumb millions, and tyrannised over them in the bargain.

We quote from the Army and Navy Gazette the following:—

The Indian Government, thanks to Lord Dufferin's impulse, has been up and doing. The railway to Quetta through the Bolan Pass will be opened next month, and bring us within military touch of Herat. There has been no procrastination this time.

We wish that we could see in the past any justification for being as sanguine as our excellent contemporary. To us it seems that the Russians are determined to be prepared at all points, we—well, not to be. We have not far to go for evidence. The same journal tells us:—

The Russian authorities at Vladivostock have been instituting a series of experiments with coal obtained from the island of Saghalien, the Amoor district, the Province of Corea, and from England. It is satisfactory to learn that all the native Pacific coal was condemned as "particularly smoky," and that the authorities "regretfully" expressed the opinion that the Russian fleet could not dispense with the use of Cardiff coal; on which account they "recommended that a large supply should be kept always on hand, as, in the event of a war, Vladivostock would be the first Russian point to experience attack."

How the astute Muscovite is endeavouring to consolidate his frontier dominions will be seen by the subjoined, taken from an Indian contemporary:—

Great changes have taken place in Merv since Russia seized it. A letter from Merv appears in the Persian Shems, stating that the town and its neighbourhood have already become more than half Russianised, in that the inhabitants have begun to borrow the language, dress, and morals of their new fellow-citizens. The writer asserts that the liberality displayed by the Russians is facilitating the process, all schools being supplied gratis with books in the Persian and Russian languages, and the leading men are being promised that, if their sons are taught to speak Russian, they will be educated at the cost of the State in Russian schools and colleges. On the completion of the railway as far as Merv, a large palace for the head of the administration and a vast arsenal will be constructed.

On the other hand, we read in the Times of the 2nd a telegram from St. Petersburg of the 29th ult., saying:—

It is stated that the further progress of the Transcaspian Railway is to be discontinued for the present, on account of financial considerations.

INDIA COUNCIL DRAFTS.—We regret to see that March went out like a very lamb as regards the demand for silver, which was weak to the last degree. The financial year ends with the Rupee worth less than three-quarters of its nominal value; nor does there seem in the immediate future any prospect of a change for the better. The Statist writes, on Saturday last, on this matter as follows:—

The minimum rates obtained this week were no better than those of the previous week, being again below 1s. 6d. per rupee, although the amount offered had been reduced from 50 to 40 lacs. About 10 lacs of bills were placed at 1s. 5 15-16d. and 5 1/2 lacs at 1s. 5 31-32d. per rupee. Twenty-three and a half lacs of transfers were also placed at 1s. 5 31-32d., and 5 lacs at 1s. 6d. per rupee. According to an official announcement posted at the Bank, the amount of bills upon India and telegraphic transfers sold by the Council from 1st April, 1885, to the 31st March, 1886, was Rs. 13,84,08,969 realising in sterling £10,523,505, the average rate per rupee having been 1s. 6 2477d., that is to say about 1/6d. lower than the estimate. The sterling amount received in 1885-6 on account of Rs. 13,53,25,369 bills and transfers was £10,292,692. The following is a comparative statement of the drawings of the India Council for the last three financial years together with the Budget estimate for 1886-87:—

Financial Year.	Amount Sold.	Sterling Amount Realised.	Average Price.
1883-84 ...	Rs. 21,27,19,462 ...	£17,315,697 ...	1/7-536

* Estimate.

Next week 40 lacs of Council Bills will again be offered for tender. From April 1st to March 30th inclusive, the Council had granted remittances for Rs. 13,41,25,369, realising £10,202,848. To the corresponding date last year Rs. 17,03,72,118, realising £13,705,777, had been disposed of.

Chit Chat.

THE Bar in India is alarmed at the rumour that "advocates would not be allowed at present to follow their profession in Upper Burma." Perhaps if this consummation were attained there would be more justice and less talk. But how about "fees?" The Bar could not be supposed to overlook these; so it is urged that it is "the privilege of a barrister to plead wherever the British flag waved." What high-sounding balderdash!

JAVA coffee-plants are being attacked by millions of rats. The English climate is doubtless capricious, but such plagues as these cannot, at any rate, be laid to its charge.

MR. DAVIDSON, late of the "Glenview Hotel," Coonoor, seems to have had a dislike to lawyers, so he made his own will thus:—

JOHN DAVIDSON'S WILL.
As to all my worldly goods I have in store,
I leave to my dear wife for evermore.
I freely give, I will no limit fix,
This is my will, and she executrix.

MR. J. SEYMOUR KEAY, of Haidarabad notoriety, has been enlightening the world as to the causes of his discomfiture at Newington at the last general election. N'importe, sufficient that he has been left in the cold; it matters not how or why.

MESSRS. GLOVER AND Co., contractors, have discovered that when 3,000 labourers are employed, it is profitable to pay regard to sanitary arrangements. It might have been thought that this was an elementary experience, but it is quoted as the highest development of "contractorial" science!

POONA has started a society designed to enlist the sympathy of the working-men of England with matters appertaining to the East. The attempt sounds rather hopeless.

A NEW "craze" has received a new name. Henceforward a collector of stamps is to be admitted within the "charmed circle" as a "Philatelist." What a grand word for an insignificant "sad!"

THE well known Orientalist, Dr. Leitner, of Punjab celebrity, having been ordered to inquire into the history of a tribe known as the "Dards," the Press in Western India transmogrified the people in question into the "Court of Wards!"

"PAGANINI REDIVIVUS" in fact, though not in name, is delighting the musical world in India, which flock in crowds to hear the great violinist, "M. Remenyi." Presumably he will honour England with a turn, and then—well, wait till he comes. Some people scoff at the possibility of a second Paganini, the "Satan-aided" fiddler.

INDIAN AND COLONIAL EXHIBITION.—The first meeting of the reception committee was held on Wednesday, March 31st. It is believed that the committee may reckon on receiving valuable aid from the Provincial Corporations, while it is hoped that in many cases the mayors of the chief seats of industry will receive the visitors and arrange for their being hospitably entertained during their stay. At their meeting on Wednesday, the committee considered generally the arrangements which might be made for the reception of the numerous distinguished visitors who may be expected to visit this country during the coming summer, and appointed a sub-committee to prepare a detailed scheme on the lines suggested.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE ASIATIC QUARTERLY REVIEW.*

In the second number of this valuable periodical the variety presented by its predecessor is equalled, and, indeed, exceeded; some of the papers being of exceptional interest. The motto, "Place aux Dames," has been duly observed; precedence being, very properly, given to a singularly unpretentious, but very well-written, account by Lady Dufferin of the "origin, organization, aim and intentions, special difficulties, and future prospects" of the "National Association" (established by her) "for Supplying Female Medical Aid to the Women of India." Remarkable that "the Association's one aim and aspiration is to bring to the women of India better health, freedom from unnecessary pain, and all the comforts and alleviations which science has discovered, and which the ministering hand of doctor or nurse can supply," the noble writer points out that these ends are to be attained (1) by medical tuition, (2) medical relief, (3) by the supply of trained female nurses and midwives. It is not the least interesting feature in an article, which everyone will read, to learn authoritatively (what has been all along understood to be the case) that the first suggestion of this purely philanthropic undertaking—one, too, so wholly dissociated from missionary enterprise as to be proof against all but wilful misapprehension—came from Her Majesty the Kaiser-i-Hind.

Mr. Boulger's paper (which follows) on the relations between England and China as affected by our conquest of Burma, is an important contribution to the "literature" which already exists on this subject. Mr. Boulger writes with a strong conviction that Burma was tributary to Peking, and that we have to consider, "not whether China's suzerain rights are of a substantial character if tried by a European standard, but whether they constitute, in the eyes of the Chinese themselves, a tangible and valuable possession." Not to dwell on the fact, that in India we have absorbed not a few tributary States, without, however, thinking ourselves bound to pay the tribute to the Suzerain, we cannot help thinking that this is a little too broadly stated. The writer, indeed, seems to be of opinion that we ought to consider ourselves fortunate if, by alienating (so to speak) a part of the freehold, we can clear off the mortgage on the remainder. He seems to have overlooked the old copybook saying, "Circumstances alter cases." Is there, now, any "mortgage" valid as against us?

When Mr. Boulger speaks of concessions, he, of course, steers on a different tack, and we are pleased to sail in his boat. The principle once granted, that we are to yield something as a matter of expediency, not of right, the amount to be yielded is fair matter of negotiation. We think that every reasonable concession should be made to the Chinese, and should be sorry to suppose that, through any diplomatic gaucherie, "we have piqued their Plenipotentiary," Marquis Tseng, "in all probability (p. 280) the coming leading statesman of China." As to the precise frontier to be fixed, we note Mr. Boulger's opinion "that the Upper Irrawaddy, the Shwelay, and the Salween would form an excellent frontier for our new possession." On this we would point out, that all history shows the unsatisfactory character of of rivers as frontiers. We might refer to the Rhine and the Danube, the former hotly disputed several times in every century since the time of Cæsar, and which has never effectually separated Teuton and Celt. But these are in Europe; and the objection to river frontiers seems to us to apply with tenfold force to the ever-shifting channels of Oriental rivers. And this we say because, while fully agreeing with Mr. Boulger, that a river (like a Strait) is a very effectual obstacle to smuggling, we cannot forget that Frontiers, "scientific" or other, exist for other purposes besides the exclusion of contraband goods. The great weight deservedly attaching to everything on China and cognate topics, which proceeds from Mr. Boulger's pen, must be our justification for having dwelt at some length on his important paper.

Mr. Pedder's article on "Village Sanitation in India" is not only interesting, and, as might be expected from its author's reputation, eminently practical, but written with a light and facile pen which invests with a kind of glamour a subject not in itself one of the most attractive, and makes the paper pleasant reading. Laying before the reader the original state of the unimproved Hindu village, the writer shows what has been done to improve it, and under what difficulties—your Hindu is nothing if not conservative—each improvement has been effected. One anecdote must not be missed.

"Villages situated on large rivers are the best off for a pure and abundant water-supply. Perhaps the majority of streams cease to flow (at least above ground, for there is usually a current below the sandy bed) in hot weather, and the stagnant pools left in them are very unwholesome. In May, 1863, I was encamped on duty at a large village situated on such a stream. Cholera was raging in the village, and I found that the people had no water except that of these pools, in which also they washed their persons and clothes, and which were horribly offensive. I dug at once several wells, or holes, in the sand under the further bank of the wide channel of the stream, which yielded an ample supply of water at least fairly pure, and I placed sentries to prevent the people from resorting to the pools. Cholera immediately began to abate, and in a few days disappeared. But the people petitioned Government against my "Zulm," or tyranny, in compelling the women to walk a hundred yards farther in the sun for water. This illustrates one of the difficulties of sanitation."

As was too often the case in other matters, the habits of the people, in so important a point as the immemorial constitution of the village communities, and their relations to the village officials (one of whose duties was scavenging), were neglected in our early Revenue Settlements. Such services as the village menials rendered to Government were paid for by fixed stipends, instead of in kind, while those, which they had been wont to render to the village, were simply ignored by the Government, while the Civil Courts declined to enforce them. The result has been, that the service cannot be insisted on, nor remuneration for it be exacted, while the menials, declining to work without pay, and having no other means of subsistence at home, have (p. 389) in many cases abandoned their villages, and, in not a few, have taken to thieving. Certain people have evidently rushed in where wiser folk would have feared to tread.

The transition from localities under British jurisdiction, where the village community is being improved off the face of the earth, to a Native State, where it flourishes in pristine vigour, is easy and natural. And Sir L. Griffin's treatise on "Native India," places before us a well, and almost eloquently, written description of life in non-British territory, as contrasted with that which is usually found in our own dominions. "In British India," says the author, "the Government is not altogether beloved. A brood of newspaper writers has been reared, who, in return for an education gratuitously given, revile the rulers whose chief desire has been to make India prosperous and free. In Native India the British Government appears to the people, not as the rapacious demon which so many denationalised Englishmen are fond of portraying it, but as the spirit of beneficence, as an earthly providence which alone can restrain the evil passions of despotic rulers" (p. 451). The Native "sees this power exercised in his favour, and not against him; he is accustomed to look to the English officer as his best and surest refuge against oppression." Proceeding from generalities to details, the Essayist sketches lightly, yet clearly, the peculiarities all depending on religion,* which the Oriental carries, as few Christians do, into every act of daily life—of a Mahomedan, and of a Hindu, State. He incidentally touches on the question, what is to be "the future religious belief of India" (p. 463). Certainly not, in his judgment, Christianity; "a convert" being looked down on alike by Natives, who disown him as an outcast, and by Europeans, who have, from experience, a shrewd suspicion "that his new creed has removed his ancient prejudice against the brandy bottle." We are, however, sorry to observe that, in the opinion of so competent a judge, though "Muhammadanism has gained largely," yet the animosity between Hindus and Muhammadans "seems increasing, and constitutes the chief future danger to public tranquillity."

The writer cannot, of course, avoid referring to caste, of which we have not seen a better definition than that which he gives: "a minute subdivision of tribes and sub-tribes into rigid social connection and trades unions. . . . Every occupation, even thieving, is hereditary." The passage in which (pp. 468-9) he contrasts the career in England of the three "Delegates," who recently aired their blatant nonsense on English platforms, with that which, under the laws of caste, would fall to their lot in India, is among the most instructive and suggestive in the entire Essay, with the whole of which we have been greatly pleased, and to the promised sequel of which we look forward with pleasurable anticipation.

Those who have never read Captain Burton's account of his venturesome journey, as a Pilgrim, to Mecca, and those—if any such there be—who, having once read it, have forgotten any of its details, will be greatly interested in the account given by Mr. Wollaston, from various sources, of "the Pilgrimage to Mecca." Mr. Wollaston has not, we understand, himself performed the Hadj (indeed, we think that, with the exception of the late Mr. Herman Bicknell, Captain Burton is the only European who has trodden the floor of the "Ka'bi," or Holy of Holies), but his description is so vivid, and so evidently derived from the personal experience of those who have kissed the sacred stone, that no one would be able to discover that he is not, as yet, entitled to dub himself Haji.

A paper of some importance on the "Public Works of India as Connected with its Progress" (which we notice elsewhere); one by Sir C. Wilson, on the future of the Sûdan (of which he says, "there must be a partial reoccupation"); a remonstrance by Sir F. Goldsmid on the neglect in our schools and colleges of Political Geography, more especially that of Asia; an extremely able article by Mr. J. M. Maclean, which deserves very careful perusal, on the much-vexed question of bimetallism; and an interesting historical sketch by Mr. F. C. Danvers on our (unprofitable) connection with Sumatra, are the smaller, but not unimportant, items which form the entrées of a very excellent and diversified entertainment.

ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.*

We are glad to find in this number the first part of a translation of Lieut.-Colonel v. der Goltz's "Nation in Arms," a work well deserving the attentive perusal of every military man; though the gallant author is, perhaps, a little biased in comparing the merits of the military arrangements of the Fatherland with those of other countries. We in England cannot but profit by the remarks which he makes regarding our own dear land and its defences; and those who do not realise the difference between war in olden times, when it was (see p. 486) a point of honour to pay (as the British Army to this day does) for supplies in an enemy's country, and war at the present day (when it seems a point of honour to pay for nothing, but to "live on the country,") may try to place before the eye of what they may be pleased to call their mind the result, at which we seem to be aiming, of admitting an enemy to a more or less permanent occupation of the fertile plains and valleys of our Southern Counties. The translation conveys, on the whole, the meaning of the original, though there are occasional slips. "Divided up" (p. 502, l. 12) is queer English for (we presume) aufgetheilt, while singular and plural seem strangely "mixed up" at p. 488 (lines 1 and 14).

The natural fitness of things has placed after Colonel v. d. Goltz's work a treatise on the Volunteers by "A General Officer," whose lot it has been (p. 512) "to have had a very extensive and protracted experience of the Volunteer Force;" a force which the General by no means overrates, but on the careful fostering of which, and its training for the exigencies of actual war, he lays merited stress. The flourish of trumpets with which Wimbledon is annually heralded seems to be but sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal, when we are informed that "throughout the force the proportion of skilled marksmen is extremely low, certainly not more than 3 or 4 per cent." (say 8,000 out of 210,000), "while the average of shooting in most battalions is far below what it should be."

Few wars have been more abounding in utterly-neglected lessons to Anglo-Indian officers than our first Afghan Campaign, so fruitful in brilliant episodes. Few of these attracted less general notice at the time, or have, subsequently, been more entirely forgotten, than gallant Lewis Brown's defence of Kahun, a place in itself of no practical importance, and situated in a pass which led no whence, no whither. Mr. Williams accidentally picked up a printed copy of Captain Brown's Journal, and has done right well in publishing it. He thinks it unintelligible why any General should have locked up troops in an out-of-the-way and useless place, where it was certain that they must lose men, and at least probable that they would have to be relieved at a great sacrifice of life. The answer is plain. Sir John Keane did this thing, and Sir John was not, except titularly, a general, nor have we ever heard him credited with strategical ability. The account of Captain Brown's very gallant defence of the place (which had been dismantled before we occupied it) is as yet incomplete. It is most interesting as a record of coolness and pluck under difficulties, and we look forward to its continuation in a future issue.

In the other papers, which go to make up a good number, we find Mr. Marvin reiterating his opinion that, for reasons assigned, it would be expedient to attack Vladivostok in case of a war with Russia (a proceeding which, according to the last Army and Navy Gazette, the Russians fully anticipate); also two entertaining stories, one, the "White Veil," almost melodramatic; the other, by Parker Gillmore, narrating the staunch fidelity to himself of a Hottentot yclept Cigar, whose fate the reader is, unfortunately, left to divine.

POPULAR LIBRARY OF LITERARY TREASURES.†

The nineteenth century is, indeed, an age of marvels, and not the least of them is the appearance of Messrs. Ward and Lock's "Popular Library of Literary Treasures." The type, though small, is clear and readable, and if it is not luxurious to the eye some allowance must be made for works of 120 pages which are presented to the public at the insignificant price of three-pence a volume, or sixpence if bound in cloth. Seeing that the contents are the cream of English literature, no one, on the score of expense, can plead ignorance of the great masterpieces of language which have hitherto been the heritage of the "upper ten."

PUBLIC WORKS IN INDIA AS CONNECTED WITH ITS PROGRESS.

In this month's Asiatic Quarterly Sir Juland Danvers, who so long acted as Government Director of Railway and Irrigation Companies, furnishes an instructive article on the above subject. Many of our retired officials, who feel in the shrinking of their own purses the influence of the contraction of the Rupee, cannot be persuaded that "so long, sir, as a Rupee is not a Rupee," it is possible for the country which uses coins of that denomination to be prosperous at all. Fortunately, there is superabundant evidence to support a contrary view of the matter; and a few lines may well be devoted to the question, how far public works have contributed to this result.

"The public works of a country," says the writer, "may be defined as those which are designed for the use and benefit of the community, and those which are required for political and military, as well as for commercial, agricultural, and general administrative purposes: they include, therefore, all artificial means of communication, whether roads, railways, or navigable canals, works of irrigation, such as canals, anicuts, tanks, and wells, river and sea embankments, telegraphs, harbours, docks, lighthouses, fortifications, barracks, and civil buildings." With this exhaustive definition we are content, though the connection with progress of fortifications and barracks is less obvious than that of the other works named, and it might be hypercritical to add breakwaters, seeing that these are designed either to protect, or to complete, harbours.

Means of communication claim the first notice. Wheresoever our great colonising predecessors, the Romans, penetrated, their primary idea was the construction of roads; of roads so permanent, that in Southern England—as from Sandwich to Dover, and from Silchester to Chichester—they can be traced for miles, and in many parts still form the foundation of our bridle-paths. We, on the contrary, had possessed India many years before a metalled road was constructed even from Calcutta to Agra. The roads previously existing, if not quite as bad as that from Jawud to Neemuch, in which an elephant is said to have disappeared in the mud, were wholly unequal to vehicular traffic; nor was a serious thought given to railways, until the arrival of Lord Dalhousie gave to their construction an impetus which has never, in spite of many financial and other blunders, been wholly lost. The hybrid system of procuring funds, called the guarantee system, probably in the end the most costly to the State which could have been devised, has the unanswerable justification popularly known as Hobson's choice; there was really no other means by which the needful money could be raised. Natives would not (and to this day will not to any considerable extent) contribute; it was not "dustoor," and the Sirkar, if it wanted railroads made, had to find the means in England. The Famine Commission appointed by Lord Salisbury in 1878, long before the days of the eighteen-penny Rupee, pointed out that the 100 millions invested had, on the whole, brought in a gross annual income of ten millions, of which five were spent in the country in wages, to its great benefit. But an advantage less obvious in ordinary times, yet which forces itself on the attention in seasons of scarcity, and which railways have in common with other modes of improved communication, is the facility which they afford for the transport of provisions from a prosperous to a famine-stricken Province or district. The utmost exertions used, in the days of imperfect communications, to fail in effecting this object. The people starved, the children were, if possible, sold, the revenue, of course, remained unpaid; and Government lost, both by the outlay to relieve sufferers, and by the outstanding of the revenue payments to which it was entitled. Anything which diminishes the "all-round" stress of a famine-period may truly be said to have contributed in no contemptible degree to the progress of the country.

"We have used the phrase "famine-period" advisedly. For nothing is more curious, nor, in the present stage of meteorological science, is anything more unaccountable, than the recurrence, in cycles, of two or three successive years of scarcity. "Out of thirty-one famines," writes Sir J. Danvers, "in the present century, fifteen succeeded each other in three, and sixteen in two, consecutive years, while the intervals between them varied from two to ten years." This recurrence of famine in consecutive years of course intensifies the suffering to an appalling extent.

It is clear that no facilities for the transport of the grain on which the whole population mainly lives will suffice, unless means be taken to ensure, as far as lies in human power, that there shall be grain to transport. And, inasmuch as the cause of famine in India is too little, rather than too much, rain, irrigation is obviously the remedy demanded. What cannot be obtained from the skies often lies beneath our feet if we will but look for it. And a fair distribution of available river water is one obvious remedy against drought. Irrigational works, unlike roads, have never been wanting in India; and it has been the pride of the more enlightened rulers—of whom there has been no lack—to connect their names and memory with the construction of some huge tank, or of some massive embankment which, closing the outlet of one or more valleys, and damming up the water which they brought down, formed a lake which, in some cases, covered many square miles. The British Government has not, we are glad to remember, the unlimited command of forced labour which was possessed by the indigenous rulers and by their Moslem conquerors. It would puzzle any Viceroy—he not possessing a Helot race in some Land of Goshen—to build a Pyramid. Where we pay in rupees, our predecessors—or rather their subjects—paid in human lives. But the engineer of the present day has the potent aid of science to an extent which the Shah-jehans and Akbars of old could, in their wildest dreams, never have anticipated. Such a work as conveying the waters of a river (the Periyar) from one side of a chain of mountains to the other side, where they are more needed, through a tunnel nearly a mile and a half long, would have somewhat amazed them. We have done not a little. We have spent on irrigation works—if not to the best advantage, for mysterious are the ways of the Public Works Department, at least to fair advantage—some twenty-five millions of pounds sterling.

That these twenty-five millions have brought in some 4½ per cent. is a proof that the outlay is pecuniarily profitable; though, in looking at the outlay, not as a means of raising revenue, but as one way among others of conducing to the progress of the country, it is only the benefit derived by the cultivator, or rather by his land, which we have to consider. And, though we say it with regret, we cannot help thinking that this latter point has been too little regarded, and that the Canal Department has been administered far too much with a view to showing a favourable balance-sheet. The Canal officers, by acting as Revenue collectors, are beginning to stink in the nostrils of the people, who do not see the advantage of paying, as it seems to them, two sets of officers for the same piece of land. The distribution of water, too, is susceptible of great improvement. Land should be irrigated, to its benefit, not saturated, to its ruin. So unhealthy are some canal-irrigated tracts that, as we read the other day, “the physical condition of human beings and cattle is notoriously low. . . . Most significant of all, the inhabitants of rain-land villages will not readily give their daughters in marriage to the residents of canal-irrigated estates;” a fact which can hardly excite surprise when we hear of sixty-two inches of water being placed on land.

Putting aside, however, errors which a more vigorous supervision would effectually check, we cannot entertain a doubt that the canals, like the railways, of India, have very materially contributed to the undoubted progress which our grand Dependency has achieved, and the reality of which is substantiated by the increased use made of railways and telegraphs, by enormously increased imports and exports, by every criterion, in fact, which is available as a means of gauging the progress, and the prosperity, of a country.

LORD HARRIS AS UNDER-SECRETARY FOR INDIA.

The following interesting paragraph appeared in the Times of India of 12th March, 1886, and its reprint carries its own apology:—

“We have already had our say about Lord Randolph Churchill as Secretary of State for India, and something is due from an Anglo-Indian newspaper to the late Under-Secretary, Lord Harris. We all knew that he was a good type of that class of Englishmen who have made the nation celebrated throughout the world, and who are as full of energy as of pluck. But Lord Harris's first period of office was so brief that the earlier part of his career is scarcely yet known in India, and the following details will be new to all, or nearly all, our readers. George Robert Canning was born at St. Ann's, Trinidad, in February, 1851. Four years later he was taken to Madras, when his father was made Governor of the Southern Presidency, and he remained in India for two years. As a child he showed extreme perseverance and energy in the pursuits in which he engaged. He was a plucky little rider at the age of four, and from the age of seven he was not only a regular attendant at the meets in the neighbourhood of his home, but already a devoted cricketer. He went to Eton at thirteen and remained there six years, excelling in everything he attempted—fencing, boxing, racquets, walking races and swimming—and carrying off prizes in all. He was in the Eton eleven for three years, the last year as captain. At Oxford he was two years in the eleven. He took his degree in 1874, and married in the same year the second daughter of Viscount St. Vincent. Lord Harris's love of cricket was so great that he not only persevered in it until he became one of the best gentlemen players in all England, but he raised the cricketing reputation of his county, Kent, in a remarkable degree. In his county he has been well known, too, for many years as a keen Conservative, an effective public speaker and an active magistrate, while, to take another side of him altogether, his soldiering qualities are of no mean order. When he passed his examination for the Yeomanry in 1876 it was said of him that he was so well up in military matters that the authorities could not puzzle him. He was, in fact, what is popularly known as a good man all round, working for the good of his county in a quiet persevering way, and so modestly, that the world at large was taken by surprise when a political career was suddenly thrown open to him. Not so those who knew him intimately. In the debate on the vote of censure on Government in 1885, his speech in the House of Lords, delivered with great power and earnestness, made a deep impression on all who heard it, and won for him the congratulations of the leaders of both parties in the Upper House. When the Conservatives came into power again Lord Salisbury, remembering this speech, at once offered Lord Harris the Under-Secretaryship for India. It was accepted; and with his usual thoroughness he threw his whole heart and soul into the work before him. His capacity for serious business was proved by the assiduity with which he discharged his duties, and we trust before long to see him reinstated in the India Office. Some day or other we hope to see him in India either as the leader of an English eleven or the Governor of one of the Presidencies. In either capacity he would acquit himself capably, for a good many battles besides the Battle of Waterloo have been won on the cricket ground of Eton. His father filled the post of Governor of Madras with credit to himself and advantage to the State. Lord Harris himself has had much the same preliminary and manly training that made Lord Mayo not only one of the most popular, but one of the most efficient, Viceroys India has ever had. In any case Lord Harris is now a man of mark in his party, and has a career before him.”

EXECUTIONS IN BURMA.

A Parliamentary paper containing telegraphic correspondence respecting military executions and dacoity in Burma has been issued. In a telegram to the Viceroy, dated January 22, Lord Randolph Churchill referred to reports of grave scandals at military executions, owing to the provost-marshal photographing prisoners at the moment of execution, adding “if true, gravest and most immediate action must be taken.” On February 15 the Viceroy telegraphed in reply to the Earl of Kimberley:—“It is certainly not true that prisoners are indiscriminately shot by troops. Investigation into charges against provost-marshals shows that he did photograph men undergoing execution, but prisoners were blindfolded and did not know, nor was execution in any way protracted. On one occasion attempts was made under provost-marshal's orders to extort evidence by threats of execution. For both offences he had been severely censured and would lose preferment.” Lord Kimberley telegraphed to the Viceroy that the conduct of the provost-marshal had excited great indignation, and the punishment awarded seemed very light, and asked, “Can provost-marshal be tried by court-martial?” and the Viceroy replied on the 22nd, “I have consulted Commander-in-Chief, who thinks provost-marshal could be tried.” The following day the Secretary of State telegraphed:—“I am of opinion that if your Judge Advocate-General advises that charges can be framed against Colonel Hooper steps should be taken accordingly;” and to this the Viceroy sent the following answer:—“In consultation with Commander-in-Chief, I have arranged that General Prendergast should be called upon to hold a regular court of inquiry into provost-marshal's conduct. Proceedings of Court will then be submitted to Judge Advocate-General, who will advise whether accused should be brought before court-martial.” The final despatch of the series is from the Viceroy to Lord Kimberley, in the course of which he says:—“As there will now be a regular court of inquiry the exact facts cannot fail to be established.”

At Karachi the local shopkeepers have raised their prices an anna in the rupee to meet the demand made on them for income-tax; so the unfortunate purchaser has not only to pay his own tax, but to disburse somewhat on the same account to save the dealer from loss. This is a curious commentary on the new mode of taxation.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to
Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGH,
COLD,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he decreed to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London. REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine, which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 12, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 26th March; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 24th March.

THE latest news from the Times Correspondent at Mandalay, dated April 11, is satisfactory enough. The so-called Alompra pretenders have been well trounced, and the capital is free from dacoity. Mr. Beraard is on the borders of the Shan States.

THE Commander-in-Chief, with his Staff and Sir R. Sandeman, returned to Quetta from Pishin on Tuesday, the entire trip along the frontier having been most successful. The Hurnai Railway and the tunnels cut through the Chappar rift greatly impressed the party with the excellence of the work done by Major Browne, R.E., and his staff. General Roberts left Quetta on Saturday, the 10th, for Sibi and Kurrachee.

THE Viceroy, after visiting, in company with the Maharajah of Benares, the sights of the holy city, has gone to Allahabad, where he opened the Muir Central College, and delivered much such a speech as is usual on these occasions: a kind of essay on study with a view to the intended future career, "nec definitus, nec brevis, articulus," as was said some years ago, in Westminster dormitory, of the Times' leaders.

WE are truly sorry to record that judgment has gone against that elegant and eloquent writer, Rukmibae (the "Hindu Lady" of the Times of India), in the matter of the restitution to her husband of "conjugal rights," which he has never exercised, or attempted to exercise, during the ten years of his nominal marriage. The case is to be appealed, and meanwhile Rukmibae might do worse than imitate some of her Parsee sisters, and take refuge at Goa.

THE Times' correspondent at Calcutta reports the case as follows:—

I mentioned that great interest had been excited by a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights pending before the Bombay High Court, the defendant in which was Rakhmibai, a gifted Hindoo lady, whose pathetic denunciations of infant marriage and enforced widowhood attracted much attention last year. This lady is a daughter of the late Mr. Janardhan Pandurang. About twelve years ago she was married to the plaintiff, Dadaji Bhibaji, she being then eleven, and he nineteen years old. She never lived with him, but remained in her stepfather's house. Last year her husband demanded that she should go to him. She refused, on the grounds that she had had no voice in the marriage, that he was personally repugnant to her, that his character was bad, that his health was indifferent, and that he had no means of supporting her. At the first hearing, before Mr. Justice Pinhey, the suit was dismissed without calling on the defendant, the Judge expressing the opinion that it would be a barbarous, cruel, and revolting thing to compel her to cohabit in the circumstances, and that neither law nor the practice of the Courts justified him in making such an order.

The husband appealed, and the case was argued at some length before the Chief Justice, Sir C. Sargent, and Mr. Justice Bayley, who, after some three weeks' consideration, have now delivered judgment. They held that the suit for restitution of conjugal rights does not stand discredited in India, and that to decide otherwise would be to disregard the whole Hindoo law, which looks upon the giving of daughters in marriage as a religious duty imposed upon parents. They therefore reversed Mr. Justice Pinhey's decision and remanded the case to the lower Court for re-trial on the merits. It is understood that, whatever be the decision on the re-trial, the case will be carried on appeal to the Privy Council, and probably that tribunal will uphold the judgment of the Bombay Appellate Bench. But it is at least equally probable that the case will deal a deathblow to the pernicious system of infant marriage, and mark an important step in the progress of social reform in India.

THE Financial Commission are not to have a monopoly of reductions of expenditure. The Bombay Government have taken the initiative. We read in the Englishman:—

On the retirement from the Civil Service of Mr. Robertson it is very probable that a reduction will be made in the number of the Commissionerships in the Bombay Presidency. It is expected that the Central Division will be abolished altogether, and that the districts will be divided between the Northern and Southern Divisions.

WONDERFUL to relate! After having, during a most critical period, left our interests at Peking in the hands of a Charge d'Affaires, we at length read in to-day's Times:—

Sir John Walsham, the new British Minister to China, left London yesterday for Peking to assume his new duties. He travels via Marseilles by the Messageries Maritimes Company's line.

THE same thing—the leaving vacant the Embassy—was done, as we pointed out at the time, at Constantinople at an especially dangerous conjuncture, not long since. But, by luck rather than good play, we had there an exceptionally gifted substitute, a chog Adam dur, Sir W. White.

THERE are still rumours of disturbances in Nipal.

It would really seem as if the disintegration of the Empire had begun when a Prime Minister announces his wish to dissociate Ireland from the rest of the United Kingdom. A cynical friend of ours took an entirely different view of the matter, "Govern Ireland," said he, "when you can't even get a decent place to hold your own English representatives! They number some 500, and you force them to come to what is, by courtesy, called their Chamber, at five in the morning, because the Government chose, some forty years ago, to select as their architect a poor stick of a man, incapable of designing a room which would hold 640 people." We really could not answer the cynic.

NATIVE Papers are still very much annoyed at the refusal of the Government to sanction the enrolment of Indian Volunteers. The Sanjibani expresses itself in plain terms:—

Lord Dufferin gave vent to some of his feelings in Madras. The Natives of India will see how the Viceroy has dealt with their prayer for enrolment as volunteers. Andrew, Pedro, Brown and Black, Feringhees and Negroes, may be admitted as volunteers, but fresh difficulties arise when the Natives of India desire that privilege. In other words, the Government cannot entrust us with arms. As it does not look well to make a definite statement of this nature, the course has been adopted of praising our loyalty. But we very well understand that the Government distrusts us. The Government has not been able to secure respect for its double-heartedness.

It is a question how far the Bengal Putwari Bill was altogether a wise measure. It has, at all events, met with very general disapprobation, in which the Bangabasi shares, as witness the following:—

The Putwari Bill was introduced into the Council of the Lieutenant-Governor last year, and protests were made against it from several places. The opinions of the Secretary of State and the officials in the mufassal have now been received. We hear that some members of the Select Committee have expressed a desire to see what the Secretary of State said on the subject, but that they were not allowed to do so, as that document is confidential. We believe that the Secretary of State has not given his assent to the Bill in full. Most of the officials in the mufassal have expressed their disapproval of the measure. Why, then, is Government going to revive the Bill in spite of so much opposition? The Bill ought to be withdrawn at once.

WE do not think it likely that even the depreciation of the Rupee by twenty-six per cent. will induce retired Indian officials to remain in the country. Tout au contraire. Yet even on this point opinions differ:—

One good (says the Anglo-Indian) which the exchange difficulty promises before long to bring about, is the settling down of large numbers of Englishmen in India, and in his belief, the hope of India for another century, that is, until a real nationality is born, lies in the presence of men in it fired with English feeling. We (Bengal Times) do not quite agree, as we think that there are many who will lose threepence in each shilling sooner than submit o life-long expatriation. It's a very sad case to have to give twenty-five per cent. of one's hard-earned gains, year after year, without anything in return, but will that drawback bind a man to India, whose soul longs for the tight little island where his dearest associations centre, his fondest hopes lie buried, and where the decline of life offers a refuge that few would reject even upon short commons? It is, to say the least, unlikely. We take this view, and we believe it will be found to be general.

THERE has always been a good deal of natural jealousy on the part of the Calcutta people at the unprecedented prosperity of Bombay, and the contrast between the two ports is dwelt on below. Commenting upon the Bombay Port Trust estimates, the Indian Daily News says:—

Here is Bombay, Calcutta's great rival, which has already taken a large slice of trade away from our port, being rendered cheaper for shipping, while the port authorities of Calcutta are blindly and wilfully pursuing a course which can only result in adding to, instead of taking away from, the burdens upon trade that now exist, and are already found to be extremely heavy. It will be noticed that the items in respect of which the chief reductions in wharf and dock fees at Bombay are proposed are those (grain and oil seeds) in whose regard Bombay has already largely drawn upon, and hopes still more to attract to itself, a field formerly belonging almost wholly to Calcutta.

WE do not think that any of our Madras readers, those especially who have been at the Presidency Town within the last year or two, will think that the following letter, addressed to the Madras Mail some time since, but which we had no space to insert sooner, at all overstates the ease with which a single foreign cruiser—we may almost say a mere gunboat, armed with a heavy Krupp—could hold Madras to ransom; and to what a ransom! Of course we know that the same may be said of Brighton. But is anything ever to be done? And when?

People (writes our contemporary's correspondent) have almost forgotten the last Russian scare, although but a few months old; at the time, however, many must have wondered what would happen if a Russian cruiser appeared off Madras. Would the six 9-inch guns, in their barbette batteries, have rendered a good account of her? To that question, supposing her to have been a moderately powerful vessel, I would unhesitatingly answer, no. To begin with, 9-inch guns are not very powerful weapons as compared with the breech-loading Krupps one might expect to meet with on a first-class cruiser. These 9-inch guns are, too, mounted on scattered barbette batteries almost on the water-line. It is evident, therefore, that an armoured vessel fighting them, while under steam, would have everything in her favour, as these batteries possess none of those advantages which are given by casemates fronted with iron, or by superior command. A cruiser, too, would find it her best policy to fight the batteries at short range in order that she might make use of the fire of her machine guns, to which the Nos. 2 and 3 at each of the guns in the batteries would be terribly exposed while loading. Then, too, a vessel might be able to direct her whole fire on the battery first attacked, and so crush all three in detail. Madras, to protect itself effectually, should be defended by casemated batteries fronted with iron, and armed with guns of large calibre, either 12-inch B. L., of 43 tons, or 12.5-inch M. L., of 38 tons. These 9-inch barbette batteries, without any command to counterbalance the great exposure to gun detachments, inevitable with this form of fortification, are a snare and a delusion; and if the supposititious cruiser ever does appear off the coast with, say, twenty-five hours to "work his wicked will" in, then—woe to Madras!

WE have read the subjoined with more disgust than surprise. Surely it is something like lèse majesté to appear at a levée with an assumed title, and persons so offending ought, for all time to come, be excluded from the Viceroy's presence, and from the Government House of the Presidency. The allegations of the Muslim Herald, if true, betoken the most scandalous carelessness, or utter incapacity, on the part of those whose duty it was to protect the Representative of the Queen-Empress, while sojourning at Madras, from such insolent proceedings. But perhaps the Madras officials imitated their Governor (whose business it surely was to prevent his guest being officially insulted), and found matters ceremonial so far removed from matters transcendental as to be beneath their notice. What would Her Majesty's opinion be of a Lord Chamberlain who were to permit the presentation to her of a Lord North Foreland or any other self-assumed title. The Muslim Herald says:—

In the list of presentations made at the Viceroy's levée we find a few Mahomedan names with apparently self-assumed titles; and what strikes us more is, that, not content with Khan Bahadur, some have gone the length of adopting for themselves the Umra and the Mulk titles also, which are equal to Marquis and Earl in England. In the list published in the local Mail there is an Amiral Umra Br. and a Rañul Mulk Br., which titles we never before heard, and unless they belong to any of the Hyderabad nobles, we would invite serious attention of Government to check such an impertinent practice—impertinent because these gentlemen not only start the titles for themselves, but also introduce them with impunity into the Government House list. If an interference in such matters is considered by Government beyond worth their while, it must also be reckoned beyond worth their while to confer an Indian title which would carry no weight whatever; and while optional titles are the order of the day, who would care for the Government ones?

THE subjoined, from the Agriculturists' Advocate, must not be inserted without a word of commendation of the sound common sense displayed in it:—

Charity begins at home is a trite saying, the value of which is not appreciated even by men of erudition. The fact of ourselves being so blind to the radical defects, imperfections, and drawbacks which exist in different societies of the Hindu community does not indicate any earnestness, anxiety, and concern for our own welfare. This in itself forms the most cogent argument for our British rulers to ignore our representations, memorials, and petitions to them for the redress of our grievances and wrongs. The system of early marriage and caste prejudices have been the main and the most powerful causes of destroying the martial spirit and esprit de corps. If we are really earnest for and expect improvement in our political condition, it is absolutely necessary for us to show our rulers that we are so by the spontaneous introduction of social reforms in our community. The prohibition of early marriage will effect half the cure for the evils of enforced widowhood.

THE liquor question has given trouble in Bengal as well as in England. About two years ago the Bengal Government appointed a Commission, with Mr. Ware Edgar as president, to inquire into the cause of the increase in the consumption of spirituous liquors among the people, and to suggest a remedy. After spending some months in visiting various parts of the Province, the Commission submitted a report enumerating the chief causes, and recommending the establishment of central distilleries in large towns, with various checks on the distillation and sale of liquor. Eighteen months have passed ere the suggestions of the Committee have been carried out; but Sir W. Lawson will be pleased to hear that the liquor traffic in Bengal, if not annihilated, is at least in a fair way to be systematized.

Chit Chat.

"DR. K. R. KIRTIKAN was of opinion," the quotation is from the Times of India, "that the Hindoos should acquire a certain domestic position before they aspired to rise high up in the political sphere." This is sound common sense.

"BURMA for the Burmans" seems a failure. The men selected go on well enough when matters are quiescent, but in times of responsibility and danger no dependence can be placed upon them. When will the authorities learn that the East must be ruled upon Eastern principles? To conquer a country, and then expect the conquered to govern the kingdom they have lost, is opposed to all the traditions of good sense and sound acumen. But "clap-trap" is the order of the day.

THE Pioneer has lashed itself into fury at the frothy declamations of a certain Mr. Telang, a democratic Native orator, who advocates an union of Indians with the view of thwarting Government in political matters. "They entrench themselves," such is the language of the semi-official organ, "within the dull precincts of a narrow egotism. They are emancipated from prejudice without having acknowledged the empire of reason; they are animated neither by instinctive patriotism nor by thinking patriotism . . . but they have stopped half-way between the two in the midst of confusion and distress." Read this all ye who fall down at the feet of "Babuism," ye Blunts, Brigh's, Seymour Keays, and Digbys, C.I.E.!

WHAT is the "Old Man's Hope?" Well, it is a picture by the pen of what the East will be when Native Representative Councils have been formed to assist (Heaven help us!) the Government; there would then be, it is assured us, "a new India, prosperous, peaceful, and progressive, with only ten per cent. of Europeans among the official classes, and less than half a lakh of British soldiers in the land, with Native Princes assured of their 'continued independence,' with the mass of the people freed from sickness, suffering, and sorrow, and with the already well-to-do classes 'living honest, simple lives, without fear or favour of or from any official.' With no unjust wars and annexations made by the expenditure of India's blood and India's money, and with all officials 'minding their p's and q's and giving the representative Councils all reasonable satisfaction,' under the simple penalty of being handed up for punishment to the British House of Commons." What utter clap-trap nonsense! The outcome of "India for the Indians" seems to be an idea that a few alliterative, high-sounding, and pretentious sentences are a panacea for all the administrative difficulties which have to be confronted in governing more than 200 millions of people! Indeed, may it be said, "A little knowledge is a dangerous thing."

THE "New Terai" tea company has just declared a dividend of twenty per cent. for the year. This is encouraging.

MR. SEYMOUR KEAT and his "friends" in India are quarrelling. Al humdu l'illah.

A POSTHUMOUS baby king of Burma has just seen light of day.

MR. EDWIN ARNOLD has written a charming poem on his departure from India. No apologies are needed for its insertion:—

"India, farewell! I shall not see again
Thy shining shores, thy peoples of the sun,
Gentle, soft-mannered, by a kind word won
To such quick kindness! O'er the Arab main
Our flying flag streams back; and backwards stream
My thoughts to those fair open fields I love,
City, and village, maidan, jungle, grove,
The temples and the rivers! Must it seem Too great for one man's heart to say it holds
So many unknown Indian sisters dear!"

THE world, says Mr. Chapman, is suffering a "dearth of gold." Few will dispute this dictum.

WHEN the Viceroy landed at Madras he was met by the Governor, Mr. Grant Duff, &c. Paragraph writers should be careful, for this reads as though "Madame" were the Governor. Perhaps she is.

EX-KING THEBAW will not have much to complain of as regards his accommodation at Rutnagherry, for two of the best bungalows at that station have been taken and fitted for his use. Rutnagherry itself is a remarkably pretty place, so long as the observer looks towards the sea, and the views from Thebaw's bungalows which are to be, are well calculated to cheer the spirits of even an exiled monarch. For directly below there are masses of green palms in which the native town of Rutnagherry is secreted; on the one side is a tidal creek with its immediately surrounding cultivation and its more distant circling hills, the valley ending in the sweep of one of those magnificent bays for which the Malabar coast is so famous. On the other side, if its component parts are considered, the scenery is very similar, but the grouping is sufficiently varied to do away with any idea of sameness. We have spoken of the beauty of the site, but his house is furnished in a manner worthy of its surroundings, and yet with none of the tawdry magnificence so often seen in the palaces of native chieftains. At home Thebaw was as Oriental in his habits and his domestic arrangements generally as in his easy way of disposing of troublesome relations. But under Mr. Arthur Crawford's guidance he ought very soon to be Europeanised, for nothing has been forgotten which under European ideas can minister to his comfort. From a luxurious four-poster to packets of plate powder, from champagne glasses to spittoons for the ladies, from a couple of carriages and pairs of horses to easy chairs, which really rest the back, everything, we hear, has been provided. A few barrel organs and a few musical boxes might perhaps be judiciously added, but nothing else, judging from the list, appears wanting. Indeed, there seems a plethora of some things—beds, for instance, which abound. As Thebaw's 300 maids of honour do not accompany him, twenty beds or so in the zenana bungalow may appear a superfluous allowance, but doubtless Mr. Arthur Crawford knows best. The general result may, however, be stated to be, that much as Thebaw may regret the loss of his white elephant and its accessories, he will have no reason to complain of scurvy treatment as a potentate out of employ.—Broad Arrow.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

Politics are again "to the fore" in the present issue of the "National." The first and the last, besides other articles, are devoted to the burning question of the day:—Is the United Kingdom to be an entity or a non-entity? The first article, that on "the Falsehoods of the Political Situation," was, indeed, penned before the secession from the Cabinet of Mr. Chamberlain an occurrence which, in view of the rapid march of events, can hardly be considered as belonging to modern history. But the query above formulated was just as clearly the question of the day a month, aye, or six months ago, as it is now. And the way to answer it is as obvious now as it was then—it could not well be more so. It is, in the words of the writer, "that all that is sound, honest, intelligent, and influential in the country shall combine, with a complete disregard as to the possible consequences of such combination on our system of Party Government, to procure a judgment of the electorate on the facts as they really exist. Let it be recognised that the first duty of the Government is to restore order, to procure the enforcement of the law, and to rid the country of the plague by which all social liberty has been destroyed."

It would be difficult to get a better definition of "the Spirit of the Age" than that given in the article which has this heading. "Competition" is its prominent characteristic. From the boy at school to the Civil Servant, the would-be professor, the politician, all is "first come, first served, and the—take the hindmost." In trade this passion to get, coûte que coûte, ahead of everyone else often leads to very questionable actions; and no one will deny, after reading the disruption speech of the whilom Conservative Gladstone, that it does so in politics too.

The editors of the "National" have had a "happy thought" in proposing to give their readers an idea of the "position of the laity in the Episcopal Church of America, and in the Colonial dioceses." In the Church of Rome the layman is nothing, except a well, whence money can be drawn. In the Church of England his status is much less accurately defined than ought to be the case. Standing, as Anglican Churchmen and Churchwomen do, face to face with Disestablishment, they cannot contemplate too seriously the experiences, as regards disestablishment, of that Church, which used to figure on the title-page of our Prayer-books, along with our own, as "the United Church of England and Ireland." Nor could they well have a better expositor of those experiences than the Archdeacon of Cloyne, Dr. Jellett, whose paper well deserves attentive perusal. The Archdeacon's opinion, "that the clergy need not be afraid to trust the laity with the exercise of equal powers in synods and councils," may not meet with the approval of rectors and vicars who systematically ignore all laymen but their own churchwardens; but it will obtain the hearty assent of all who will bear in mind that man is not for the Church, but the Church for man.

Apropos of Henri—or, as he preferred to call himself, Hendrik—Conscience, the well-known Belgian novelist, the Rev. George Edmundson contributes an article of really exceptional interest on Belgium. The little country could almost be contained within the limits of a large English county; yet it has three different populations—French, Flemish, and Walloon—and a history as diversified as that of any country of Europe, of which, indeed, it has proverbially been the battlefield, or "cockpit." Yet, except in Holland, it would not be easy to find, within a few hours' journey from England, a country so entirely original. Conscience was the impersonation of the national feeling of abhorrence from Holland (a country distasteful to the "braves Belges" chiefly on account of the difference of religion) and from France, in which Belgium has more than once been so nearly engulfed. Belgian literature was like the snakes in Iceland ("there are no snakes in Iceland") until Conscience appeared; people read, faute de mieux, French, German, even Dutch, writings; books, in short, in any tongue but their own. Conscience taught them to enjoy original works in their own language, and has probably done more than anyone to perpetuate the existence of a little known, yet, from an ethnographical point of view, a most interesting, language. He is fairly entitled to the praise assigned to him by the sculptor "Conscience leerde zijn volk lezen" (Conscience taught his people to read). This is an article which no reader should leave unperused.

It has been said, and we believe truly, that nothing is more difficult than to frame a definition. You must include everything which belongs to the thing to be defined, and on no account must you exclude anything. When you come to define the precise scope of an elastic phrase, your difficulties increase with its elasticity. Now a more elastic word than Gentleman it would be difficult to devise. It does not apply to barristers, nor to members of Parliament, for they are "Esquires." It probably applies to crossing-sweepers, for we remember being told that a "gentleman" of that profession was ready to carry a parcel for us. Yet "Do you call yerself a gen'lman?" is not an uncommon form of obijuration among that very class. On the whole, we think, considering the gravity of the matter in dispute, that Mr. W. R. Browne did well in departing this life before he put into type anything respecting it. Nevertheless he has left us an excellent article on the subject. "Any true definition of a gentleman," he wisely remarks, "must be wide enough to include some kings and some labourers." And this is his own: "A gentleman is one to whom discourtesy is a sin, and falsehood a crime." The usual charge brought by foreigners against Englishmen, that they never speak to travelling companions—a charge accentuated by the old story, that an Oxford man, on the box of a stage-coach, would not ask another for a light for his cigar until he had been introduced to him by the driver—is, we think, very fairly met by Mr. Browne. "It is not," he says, "that the Englishman is either selfish or morose; he only takes it as a principle of courtesy that needless conversation is better omitted unless it is to the taste of both parties."

Mr. Armstrong's article on the fame of Turner, a painter whose pictures hardly "improve by keeping," and who, pace Mr. Ruskin, will probably not stand quite so high in the estimation of posterity as he now does in that of some enthusiasts, seems to us to be, on the whole, fair; the writer candidly admitting that Turner did not represent things as they were. "He sets his mind to work, not to select from the scene before him those characteristics which tend towards a single impression, but rather to introduce foreign elements."

An entertaining paper by Lady Rayleigh on her somewhat diversified canvassing experiences (we are glad to say that, though unsuccessful, she was on the right side); a scathing exposition, by Mr. Harris, of the real meaning of Home Rule, and a continuation of Mr. Mallock's novel, "The Old Order Changes," are the minor papers which complete a very good number of this Review.

INDIA AND TIGER-HUNTING.*

"I don't want to read, or to hear, a confounded lot of traveller's lies," is the not uncommon exclamation of the average Briton, if, while he is quietly seated at his fireside, in the company of his matronly spouse, and a bevy of daughters, attractive as only English girls can be, someone hints that there is an interesting book about tiger-shooting, which has just made its appearance, and bids fair to turn out a success, at Mudie's or Smith's. And in many cases the feeling is not unnatural. For most narrators of their own adventures are so unreasonably egotistical, that one cannot help suspecting them of a (possibly unconscious) inclination to "accentuate" their own part therein. Now we may truly aver that no one will have this fault to find in the present work of Colonel Barras. His sporting adventures, and they are neither few nor commonplace, are told with such plainness of language and evident accuracy that the reader involuntarily feels that he is reading an unvarnished narrative of facts as they occurred. Yet tiger-shooting is so exciting a pursuit, that it is no mean tribute to the Colonel's coolness that he narrates these facts with such evident insouciance.

Commencing by a few hints to brother Shikarries as to their equipment, our author starts with his first "foray," which took place in Central India; but the happiest two months of his life, this enthusiastic sportsman tells us, he passed in that paradise for Shikar, the Terai. We also have (in Vol. II., at p. 63) an account of panther-shooting on the hills of the Deccan, a sport, we are told, "not only different to any yet described, but in many respects more interesting," though, perhaps, not less dangerous, as the Colonel found to his cost. These adventures are all described in adequate detail, and the whole is wound up by an account of an expedition (Vol. II. p. 190) from Ahmedabad, against a marauding hyæna.

One would be surprised not to find in these pages many amusing anecdotes, though the author now and again gives us an idea of his views regarding matters political; these being all but invariably unfavourable to the Native States.

Of the sagacity of elephants he speaks, as do all who have had any real acquaintance with them, in the highest terms. Here is an instance. A tiger, having been heard roaring, "divining that he was pursued, stopped (p. 136) his concert, and crouched in what he considered a safe nook. He might possibly have given us the slip had not all the elephants winded him. I had never seen them do this so well before. They all stood around at different posts, and, stretching out their trunks towards a common centre, they pointed to the very spot where the tiger was lying."

(P. 24.) In noticing General Burton's work, "Reminiscences of Indian Sports" (ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL, 1885, p. 941), we called attention to his opinion that many deaths, especially of females, put down to wild beasts and snakes, are, in reality, murders, and we regret to find that the General's belief as to this is shared by Colonel Barras. "My own opinion," says the latter, "is that murder is frightfully common among the Indian population, and that wild animals, especially snakes, are made to account for many a black deed committed in remote districts free from all European control."

* "India and Tiger-hunting." By Colonel Julius Barras. Series II. London; Swan Sonnenschein and Co. 1885.

Here is an amusing instance of a superstition familiar to every Anglo-Indian, namely, that a tiger is not always really a tiger. Once, when the Colonel was out, on a tiger intent, "He" (the Sahib) said a voice in subdued tones, "will never shoot this tiger—never, for it is not a tiger, but a faqueer, who has long ago quitted the human shape, and is doomed to accomplish the rest of his penance in the form of a wild beast. Till this is done the higher powers will protect him. As a proof that what I say is true, the bangles which the saint wore on his arms are still around the tiger's wrists."

"Have you yourself ever seen these ornaments on this tiger?" asked a doubter.

"Hundreds of times," responded the voice.

No one need be ashamed to learn from the experience of others; and, even in these days of heliography, we might, mirrors failing, remember that our Indian fellow subjects contrive to do without them. While out panther-shooting, "it is," says our author, "very pretty to see the men on the distant heights signalling to those guiding the party below. This they do with their long sticks, and . . . they contrive to make themselves perfectly understood even when at such a distance as to appear mere specks on the sky-line." How far is this Indian experience utilised in military operations on occasions when the obscuration of the sun renders heliographic signalling all but impossible?

Rarely can we open the books of a Shikari, whether the "Old," so long known to fame, or the "New," as Colonel Barras in one of his works styles himself, without getting useful hints: the above is one. Of elephants we hear plenty, perhaps almost too much, for the author's experiences with these creatures were various, and perhaps interested himself more than they will excite the attention of his readers. One may be given. On one occasion the Colonel saw an elephant, dubbed Futteh Ali, who had a certificate of ill-temper. "You see, Sahib," said the Mahout, "this elephant is a beast devoid of religion (be imān), and he hates the English." Not that his dislikes were at all eclectic; for he had killed two natives, and the Mahout was quietly looking forward to a similar ed.

This book will well reward the perusal of anyone interested in the pursuit of big game. As we have said, the straightforward and soldierly style of the narratives is alone sufficient to commend them to the reader: the volumes may well beguile many a leisure hour.

THE ILLUSTRATED NAVAL AND MILITARY MAGAZINE.*

In this number the "Record of the Victoria Cross" is continued, and comprises those gained before Sebastopol previous to Inkerman. From the day when the Retribution, just before the declaration of war, quietly steamed, in spite of Russian warnings, into Sebastopol harbour, giving that excellent daughtsman, Mortagu O'Reilly, time to sketch the details of the various batteries which commanded it, and any one of which could have blown the little frigate out of the water, the Muscovite had many opportunities of admiring the coolness, and calm indifference to danger, of the British forces. Few instances of the possession of these inestimable qualities are more striking than those of Collingwood Dickson (Colonel R.A.), Sergeant McWheeney, Corporal Owens, and Private Grady—recorded in the present issue. We also meet with matters Muscovite in "A Scamper through Russia," an interesting and well written (and illustrated) account of winter months passed in that country.

Ships and shipping companies claim three papers. We have the eventful career of the old Bellerophon, in which the first Napoleon made his last sea voyage—that to St. Helena—and of her successors: a full account of the British India Steam Navigation Company, as No. 4 of "the Merchant Navy of Great Britain," and, last, but by no means least, a very accurate description of the new fast French cruiser, the Cécille, a formidable armour-plated vessel of nearly 7,000 tons displacement, and armed with sixteen heavy guns, ten machine guns of the Hotchkiss pattern, and four torpedo-launching tubes. She is to be lighted throughout by electricity, and is destined to attain a speed of nineteen miles (not, it would seem, knots) an hour. The illustration gives one the idea that she would be a decidedly ugly customer.

Colonel Duncan, the popular M.P. for the Holborn Division, speaks very encouragingly of the present condition of Sir Evelyn Wood's Egyptian army. It has cost much trouble to bring it into anything like what a British commander would call order; this has, however, been at length done. The little army has a tried General, to whose "personal energy much, very much, is due"; and who "would be the first to admit that no General was ever better served than he was by the English officers whom he selected."

A turn of the kaleidoscope brings to view another army, of vastly different dimensions, no other than the Austro-Hungarian, respecting which Colonel Malleon, under the head "Europe in Arms," concludes his exhaustive and fully illustrated essay. For the valuable details given concerning the equipment of the various corps we must refer to the paper itself, one which every military, and every intelligent political, reader will peruse with profit, as well as with interest. The great variety of peoples subject to the Potentate who wears the Imperial and Royal crowns, gives him, of course, a vast field for obtaining recruits of very different races and of widely differing habits. Of this the utmost advantage rendered possible by circumstances is taken, and the machine, originally composed of such diverse elements, is welded into a whole tolerably homogeneous, yet in which the peculiar characteristics of each part have, as far as may be, fair play; no easy matter to ensure in an army which, on a peace footing, numbers some 300,000 men and nearly 17,000 officers. It may be doubtful whether the thirty Imperial and Royal fortresses enumerated by Colonel Malleson might not, in time of European war, lock up an inconvenient number of men.

A brief life of Lord Wolseley contains no new facts, being, indeed, but an abstract of the published biographies. The "Volunteer Adjutant's" paper on "the Supply of Ammunition in the Field" is suggestive, while the real inventor of the percussion lock, which has for so many years, in one modification or another, been the only form in use, is shown by Major A. J. F. Reid, B.S.C., to have been a parson, the Rev. Alexander John Forsyth, LL.D., who has left a singular account of the way in which he was led to make the invention.

For the other papers which are comprised in a number of more than usual merit we must refer our readers to the magazine itself.

THE "faddists" of the day, too, in this country have discovered an admirable way of governing India. Experience is to be abolished, for as soon as any one becomes thoroughly qualified he is to be set aside and a fresh man is to take his place. It at once strikes an ordinary mortal that the inevitable result would be to swell the pension list to an inordinate degree, but then "on paper" only salaries are given, not retired allowances, so the new plan "looks" cheap. But, then, it is further contended that the scheme will secure a constant succession of Agents—untried, of course—"of sound liberal principles," and in direct touch with the democracy of England. Fancy Bill Sykes administering justice in the name of the British Government! What would happen with the luckless eighth commandment? Fancy a sturdy British butcher ruling a territory where Hindu prejudices as to the slaying of kine had to be respected! Fancy a foul-mouthed blatant infidel holding the reins of power amongst a set of bigoted Wahabis and fanatical Muslims, who almost hourly fall down and worship the Creator of heaven and earth! A shrewd suspicion may be hazarded that the throats of the democrats of "sound liberal principles" would make the acquaintance of the assassin's knife ere many suns had set on the land of their adoption. This, forsooth, is the enlightenment of the nineteenth century.

A VOYAGE IN A "CLAN" STEAMER.

SUEZ, February 9th.

In these days of Syndicates and Conferences, when the various lines of Ditchers travelling to the East have adopted equal fares to and from the old country, the passenger naturally seeks to secure a passage in the most comfortable and well-found steamers leaving the port. Many lines are popular with the travelling public with more or less reason, but few have made such rapid strides in public estimation during the past few months as the Clan Line. It was my good fortune to take a passage in the Clan Macpherson—one of the largest and most commodious of this splendid line of steamers—and from the day she left Colombo, the 27th of January, to the present moment, when we lie at anchor in Suez harbour, I have never had cause to regret my choice. We have had a glorious run to this place in every respect. The weather has been most delightful, neither too warm nor too cold; and though it was fairly rough for a couple of days in the Indian Ocean, the ship made light of it, and fiddles on the tables were never necessary. Aden we reached under eight days, and five days' run up the Red Sea brought us here in just thirteen days, by no means a bad passage, considering that the engines were slowed down soon after leaving Colombo, as we were making so much more than the regulation speed. It must be remembered, too, that we have on board nearly 5,000 (five thousand) tons of cargo. It would be useless to deny that some time past a strong prejudice has existed against the Clan Line, both as passenger steamers and as cargo boats; but it is to be doubted whether much of this was aught else than heedless gossip passed from mouth to mouth in follow-my-leader fashion. One thing is certain: not half-a-dozen of the many who have thoughtlessly run down the Line know of what they were talking, or could have produced any facts in proof of their assertions. With the exception of a Clan boat lost off the Mauritius some years ago, not one vessel of this line has ever come seriously to grief.

No steamer that I am acquainted with is more handsomely fitted up in every part than the Clan Macpherson. The saloon is the picture of comfort, and about the coolest part of the ship. Placed amidships, taking up the complete width of the vessel, with four large windows—they cannot be called port-holes—facing forward, the wind is always passing through it, whilst the port-holes on either side are the largest I have ever seen on any passenger steamer, being upwards of four square feet in size. The beautiful and substantial oak carving, the mirrors, and the truly æsthetic fireplace, all go to make up as pleasant and comfortable a saloon as one could wish for. The latter—I am alluding to the fireplace—with its brass fender and coal scuttle, I am thinking we shall require to make use of before we sight "Old England." The cabins are very large, roomy, and cool, and by no means the stuffy boxes with which one has so often to put up with on board ship, whilst all the internal arrangements are perfect. Perhaps the most noticeable feature of the ship's economy is the excellent manner in which the electric light is worked and managed. Nothing could be more perfect than this on board the Clan Macpherson. Every cabin has its electric light, which can be turned on or off at will; and all through the journey it has not failed us once. Saloon, cabins, passages, engine-room, cook-house—every part of the ship—are lit with electric light, and until it has been regularly used it is not possible to imagine how very much superior in every way it is to oil or gas. Another noticeable feature on board this ship at all events is the strict discipline maintained, which, as was remarked by one passenger, was more like that of a man-of-war than of a merchant vessel. Every day at eleven o'clock the captain, who thinks no detail too trifling or insignificant, together with the chief officer, doctor, and chief steward, inspects the ship from end to end, to see that order and cleanliness are preserved in every department. Cabins are visited, also the pantry, bakehouse, bathrooms, &c., whilst the quarters of the men are not neglected, and woe betide the luckless individual who has allowed dirt to accumulate anywhere, for surely he will not escape the vigilant eyes of the captain, who takes a pride in having everything in his ship clean, from the cook-house to the floors of the saloon and the brass of the fender. The ship is most wonderfully clean, and well may it be so, for scrubbing and cleaning goes on from morning till night, and is hardly finished then.

Every Saturday we have boat drill. All hands on board are told off to the six different boats, the officer of each mustering his crew, and seeing that all necessaries, such as compasses, fresh water, &c., are placed in the boats, which are lowered with the crew in them. Such instructive drill as this should certainly be practised on every ocean-going steamer, but I fear there are very few on which such is the case. Too frequently we read in cases of shipwreck that the greatest confusion prevailed, inasmuch as no one knew their proper places in the boat, and nothing was in working order from the tackle to the boats themselves. By regular boat drill all possibility of this is obviated, whilst confidence in the arrangements for their safety is given to both crew and passengers.—Ceylon Times.

QUETTA has been immortalised as a "place of twenty-five lady power." What a happy hit!

THE BONEYRWALS.

THE Punjab Frontier Force seems likely ere long to smell hostile powder under its new Commander. The Boneyrwals, or inhabitants of the Boneyr Valley and the adjoining districts, have long shared with the Afridis a bad pre-eminence among the frontier tribes of the North-West for daring raids and generally rebellious conduct. The Boneyrs, it may be remembered, were the chief offenders in the Umbeyla Campaign of 1863: and they number so many fighting men, in a country so difficult, that the force required to reduce them is estimated at some 10,000 men: an estimate probably by no means excessive if, as is likely enough, they are joined by the Afridis. The necessity, under which we find ourselves, of despatching, every few years, an expedition on a considerable scale into the Hills, has led many people to doubt whether our whole system of managing our relations with the frontier tribes be not susceptible of great improvement. An Indian contemporary tells us:—

Some very excellent authorities think that we ought to possess the Afridi country, as it flanks the Khyber Passes on one side, and the Kurum Passes on the other. A little way further down comes the great Gomul Pass, the railways and roads towards which are now making, and for which something like five millions sterling are eventually to be paid. Should the Afridis, as stated before, join the Boneyrwals, there would be a grand opportunity for a decisive measure, but it must really be a decided and not a half-and-half measure. There, in Tirah and about the Gomul, are fine open plains in which our European troops might well be located, and in which we could give land to a military militia, both European and Native. The beautiful climate of these regions, where the pine grows luxuriously, and where lovely perennial streams are ever flowing, would supply fruit for all India. Moreover, the country is full of mineral wealth in the shape of iron, copper, and sulphur, and gold too has been found there. Coal exists, too, but the lodes found at present are of no depth, though they crop up on to the surface. In these places and Cashmere, one of the most crying wants of India might be satisfied, namely, a suitable climate for Europeans and European troops which would prevent the enormous drain of £17,000,000 sterling going annually out of the country.

Again :—

Anyone who has seen the North-West Frontier could not but think of a big wall enclosing the Garden of India, as Elphinstone remarked nigh on half a century ago. There is no doubt that this wall ought to have been in our hands long ago, and these Swatis, Boneyrwals, Momunds, Afridis, Mahsud, and other Waziris either shunted or turned into peaceable citizens many years ago. With the heads of the Bamian and Gomul and Bolan Passes in our hands, we, with our small, compact, and well-equipped army might have been safe; but as it is now, we shall have to meet vast hosts of men with vast hosts of men, if we can get them, but there is the rub.

Now, the occupation of any considerable portion of additional territory is not only a new departure, but a measure in itself of very doubtful expediency, and one which could only be adopted on the clearest proof of its being absolutely unavoidable. It is, however, a very obvious one, and one which, on this account, will never lack advocates. But that the policy which has hitherto governed our relations with these tribes needs reconsideration is, we think, established beyond all question. Here, again, the terrible money difficulty appears. The marauders cannot be coaxed into abandoning their evil ways without money, (and of coaxing there has hitherto been, we are inclined to think, just a little too much,) nor can they be coerced without money; a difficulty which the Government feel most keenly. It was indeed at one time thought probable that the expedition would be deferred. We hope not. The Boneyrwals are astute enough to promise anything, if they can only keep us out of the country until they have had time to gather in their harvest, and are already temporising with this very object. Yet it is before the harvest is got in that an expedition, to be really punitive, should have entered the hills, and we hope soon to have to report that it has started.

ROUTES TO CHINA, VIA ASSAM.

THE events which have brought us, within the last few months, into immediate contact with China, must not blind us to the fact, that in Assam we possess a Province which affords comparatively easy access directly from the plains of Bengal, without employing the circuitous route via the Irrawaddy, to within a measurable distance of Yunnan. In the days of old, before the annexation of Upper Burma had "come within the range of practical politics," the question how best to reach China from Assam had been hotly enough debated. It was felt that a direct route would not only benefit the large valley of Assam, and convert it from a cul-de-sac into a great highway, but that two large and populous empires touching each other, and in harmony, would be brought into direct intercourse.

We hear now of routes from Burma, across the Shan States, into China, of railways from Moulmein across the mountains to a point on the Yang-tse-Kiang, but the more northerly route through Assam, has, of late, received, perhaps, less attention than it deserves.

The reason is not far to seek. Assam was for many years an outlying Province, managed by a Governor-General's Agent, whose reports, as long as they contained nothing alarming, were simply pigeon-holed. But the said Governor-General's Agents had been by no means behindhand in bringing to notice what was needful for the development of the resources of the Province, and always recommended the reopening of a route (via Patkai, and the Hukong Valley), which presents but little difficulty. It has more than once been specially reported on, and it has been shown that the only obstacles were of a political character, which will be materially modified now that we hold Upper Burma, and by no means of a physical nature. Mr. Peel crossed the pass—if so it may be called—at 3,500 feet above sea level, but there are other passes, notably those "by which the Ahoms and Burmese entered," of 2,000 feet or less. The present route, Mr. Peel adds,

"is selected simply because it presents an easy passage. The trouble of climbing a few hundred feet more or less is of little consequence to the hardy mountaineers. It is also near some villages where provisions are procurable, the country east being absolutely uninhabited."

The continuation of the little trip is worth recalling:—

After crossing Patkai I descended to the Nongyang Lake, a sheet of water about 1,800 by 1,000 yards, lying in an open flat grassy valley, about ten miles long by two or three broad. As I had taken a "Rob Roy" canoe with me, I was able to get out on the lake and had a good view of the range; the lake and valley level stands from 1,500 to 2,000 feet above that of Assam. On returning, my party crossed from the Nongyang Lake on the Burmese side, to the river Nunki on the Assam side, in about seven hours of actual travel.

Hitherto the great obstacle to any route this way was thought to be difficulty of crossing Patkai; it was considered an impassable barrier, even by those in favour of a joint route from Assam and Upper Burma. But it is now clear that this barrier does not exist, and that an easy and low route is possible. Thus the first step in a good and easy trade route out of India towards China is secured, and secured here alone. The total distance of a route from the plains of Assam at the Nampuk to the Yangtse I estimate at 300 miles to 350, including windings; and to clear out a serviceable bridge path or fair weather road on this I estimate would cost but £10,000. The present path for long distances is a mere jungle track, often obstructed by fallen trees; small deep gullies necessitate long detours. Were some of the jungle removed, and fallen trees, a few strong logs felled over the little streams would make a good commencement.

At a time when it is a matter of political expediency to conciliate China in every reasonable way, and to bind her to us by the bonds of mutually profitable commerce though as many openings as possible, it may be well to direct attention to these once so frequented, but now so entirely neglected, trade routes.

STRANGER'S HOME FOR ASIATICS.—The annual meeting of this most deserving charity will be held at the Home, West India Dock-road, Limehouse, on Thursday next, at 3 P.M., under the presidency of the late Governor of Bombay, Sir James Fergusson, when we have no doubt that a full attendance will be ensured. We are glad to see from a letter from the Rev. George Small, which will be found in our Correspondence column, that satisfactory progress is being made in the reorganisation of the Ayah's Home.

IMPERIAL PARSIMONY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—In the Allahabad Pioneer Mail of the 17th ult. is an article on Imperial Parsimony under the title of "Uncivil Truths about Civil Justice;" its study by every member of Parliament would be very beneficial.

None of our legislators, with the exception perhaps of Sir George Campbell, have any clear idea of the hatred entertained in 1857 by our subjects in India against our Civil Courts of Law. Great numbers of our Native Judges were openly accused of evading their duties by nonsuited plaintiffs whenever they could succeed in picking a hole in the plaint; and some of our European Judges were believed to have been raised to the Judicial Bench because they had not weight enough to administer the affairs of a District to the satisfaction of a paramount Power.

Mr. Justice Prinsep has now submitted a report on the Civil Courts of the Bengal Presidency, which must remind the actors in 1857 of the hatred which then existed owing to the evasion of justice by the Government of India. The first duty of an Oriental Government is to dispense justice; when Moses found that the burden was too great for him, he transferred the duty to others; when David neglected to dispense justice, the hands of Abithophel and of other rebels were strengthened.

The Executive government in India had better take warning in time. The Supreme Court, both in Calcutta and in Bombay, has at times been a thorn in its side; if Sir Comer Petheram be enabled to prove to the people of England that a parsimonious government prefers cheap injustice to the duty of teaching justice by example to 200 millions of souls, its condemnation by Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Irishmen will be terrible.—Your obedient servant,

April 6.

AYAHS' HOME.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Many of your readers, no doubt, will be anxious to know the result of the two meetings last month, in the Zenanah Society's Rooms, Adelphi-terrace, to discuss the question as to the future of this important institution. They will be glad to learn that the directors of the Asiatic Strangers' Home having been requested to come to the rescue, they, at a subsequent special meeting, passed the following resolution:—"That the committee of the Strangers' Home for Asiatics guarantee £100 rent for the first year, in order to prevent the Ayahs' Home from falling through at this time, until arrangements can be matured; and they will endeavour to form a Ladies' Committee to raise the £100 for the first and future years, and to supervise the management." This committee of ladies has since been formed, and will doubtless succeed in raising the requisite supplementary funds. Contributions will be thankfully received by J. H. Fergusson, Esq., Hon. Sec., Strangers' Home; or by Mrs. Macfarlane, 17, Westbourne-park, W.—Yours truly, Strangers' Home, Limehouse, E., April 10.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb,
and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public
are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Ceremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D., M.R.A.S.,

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary
of the Church Missionary Society,
Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Muhammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary World.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr.
Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopædia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammadan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism
as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Muhammadan faith, the information being in every case taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars. . . .
This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Homeward Mail.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and élite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pearls and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, APRIL 19, 1886.

Notes of the Week.

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 2nd April; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 31st March.

FROM Burma there is that best of all news—none whatever.

TELEGRAPHING from Calcutta, under date April 18, the Times Correspondent informs us of the Viceroy's arrival at Simla on the 12th. "There is, however," he adds, "a report current that Lord Dufferin will return here when the rains set in, in June or July. No Viceroy has spent a summer in Calcutta since Lord Northbrook did so during the Bengal famine, in 1874; and it is not likely that the rumour has any good foundation. It is certain that any proposal to abandon Simla, even for one season, would be vigorously opposed by the crowd of officials who follow the Viceroy thither annually; and there is only too much reason to believe that their opposition would be supported by the India Office, and that it would be too powerful for even so strong a man as Lord Dufferin to overcome. Simla is likely to continue the Indian capital for the greater part of the year until some great disaster teaches the Government the folly of living apart from the country and the people which they govern."

THE sittings of the Finance Commission (he states) which are private, have commenced, and the method of procedure is stated to resemble that adopted by the Viceroy's Council, in that each member has had one department, or head of expenditure, allotted to him, with a view to his examining it thoroughly, and submitting suggestions to the entire body of the Commission. Before going to Simla, Mr. Elliot, President of the Commission, and Mr. Cunningham, had lengthened discussions with the Governments of Bengal and the North-West Provinces; and it is probable that, in the course of the summer, some, or all, of the Commissioners will visit the capitals of other Provinces.

THE Commander-in-Chief seems determined to make a most thorough survey of the frontier defences. On his return from Beloochistan he went to Kurrachee, where he arrived on Friday. On Sunday he was to start for Peshawur, whence he will examine the Khyber, and the posts in that direction; after which he will join the Government at Simla.

SOME experiments have been successfully made on the Indus Valley Railway in running locomotives fired with petroleum; and it seems likely that the frontier railway engines will before long derive their fuel from the oil wells near Sibi.

ON the same authority we are informed that the new furlough rules for the Staff Corps, lately sanctioned by the Secretary of State, and published last week, do not appear to give satisfaction to the officers, as they are, in many respects, less liberal than those recommended by the Indian Government. It is felt also to be a great mistake that, instead of passing one set of rules for all officers, as the Indian Government proposed, the Secretary of State has retained the system of calling upon each officer to elect the rules under which he will take his leave.

THE Mysore Government has established a mining department, for the purpose of making a thorough examination of all auriferous reefs in the State, and for the regulation of grants of mining concessions.

SCINDIA's health is said to be slowly improving, but he is still very weak.

IT is satisfactory to hear that "the abuses which have made the Calcutta Municipal Administration a scandal to British India" are likely to be mitigated, if not altogether swept away, by the Bill for its reorganisation, which has been introduced into the Bengal Legislative Council. The city and its suburbs are to be united under one municipality, thus enabling the water supply and conservancy arrangements, which have done so much to check disease within the town, to be extended to the plague spots outside the present municipal boundary. The Government will relieve the city of the charge of supporting the police, and so set free the police-rate for purposes of sanitation. The inner Committee of the Corporation known as the Town Council will be reduced from its present unwieldy number—thirty—to ten, and its members will receive a small fee for each meeting. No further step will be taken with the Bill till November, the intermediate time being devoted to the collecting of opinions and criticisms.

Apropos of the hitch in the work of the Afghan Boundary Commission, owing to new and inadmissible Russian claims, Reuter tells us, under date April 17th:—

The semi-official Journal de St. Pétersbourg, alluding to-day to the unfavourable reports published by some foreign newspapers concerning an alleged hitch in the work of the Anglo-Russian Commission for the delimitation of the Afghan frontier, points out, that a task so complicated as the establishment of a normal boundary in almost totally unexplored regions, inhabited by half savage nomads, cannot but present numerous difficulties.

"Both Governments," adds the journal, "are animated by a pacific and friendly spirit. The Commissioners on both sides have instructions to continue their labours without regard to differences of opinion which may arise, and which will be referred to the two Governments by the respective Commissions at the conclusion of their labours."

RAILS have been laid on the Russian Transcaspien Railway to within 140 kilomètres of Sarakhs. The line will then have approached within 200 kilomètres of Herat. The well-informed Political Correspondence of Vienna, giving some details about the railway works, says that they have been pushed on with such rapid progress through the indefatigable activity of General Annenkoff. This officer having to keep the cost of the works within 16,000 roubles per kilomètre, found that this could only be done by training Native workmen. He began by employing 6,000 Tekkes and Mervians, and they showed themselves such expert navvies, that he is now employing 18,000 of them, at no higher wages than 33 copecks each per day. It has also been General Annenkoff's plan to construct the line without building stations, as he thinks the sites most convenient for these can best be determined after the railway has been in use for some time. Stone guardhouses and signal-boxes have, however, been erected at distances of 10 kilomètres apart all the way.

A CALCUTTA contemporary suggests that other "finds" besides Dalhousie's historical letter await utilization at Mandalay.

It might be well worth while for the Government of India to depute an experienced mechanical engineer to Mandalay to take stock of the machinery belonging to the late Burmese Government. We learn from an officer who visited the different workshops, if they can be so called, in and about the city, that the amount of machinery, much of it modern, and all imported by the ex-King's father, is almost incredible, and must have cost crores of rupees. There is a copper mill complete that has never been run, Nasmyth's hammers of great size, lathes and all kinds of mining and other machinery, a greater part of which has not been erected, lying about rusting in the jungle and in all sorts of out-of-the-way corners."

THE subjoined, which we take from the Times of India, is suggestive. Litigation in Sleepy Hollow ought to be—we have an idea that it is!—costly, if only to pay expenses. An instructive return might be prepared, showing, for the various Provinces, the cost per cent. of recovering at law, say a thousand rupees:—

The High-Court Judges of Madras, with thirty-one millions of inhabitants, cost the State Rs. 5,41,809; the High Court Judges of the North-West Provinces, together with the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, with a population of forty-four millions, cost Rs. 2,91,000, and in Bombay, with only twenty-three millions, the cost was Rs. 2,23,000. In the Punjab, with its population of twenty-two millions, the High Court Judges only cost Rs. 1,96,000. The cost of the Original Branch of the High Court in Bengal (sixty-nine million inhabitants) is Rs. 1,91,000, while that of Bombay (twenty-two million inhabitants) is Rs. 2,44,000. The fact is no doubt capable of explanation, but it requires explanation.

THE Civil and Military Gazette, in speaking of the visit to Calcutta of Nizam-ul-Mulk, the son of the Chitral ruler, says that he may be regarded as one of the most notable persons who have visited the capital for some time. Chitral, as the Gazette rightly reminds us, is a country of no small importance to us; for it guards the exits, on this side, of some of the easiest passes over the Hindu Kush. Aman-ul-Mulk, the present ruler of Chitral, and father of the man who has gone to Calcutta, formerly held possession of Lower Chitral only. In 1870, or shortly afterwards, he expelled Mir Wali, the ruler of Upper Chitral—the man who murdered Mr. Hayward—and ten years later Pahlwan Khan, who was set up in Mir Wali's place, was likewise deposed, and the whole country brought under the rule of Aman-ul-Mulk. He is, therefore, a Chief whose friendship is worth courting; and the visit of his son to Calcutta may have the happiest results.

"ONE of the olden time." An Anglo-Indian, veritably of the old school, passed away at Arrah on the 6th of March, in the person of George Drummond, Esq., late of the Nan Sagal estate. Mr. Drummond landed in India in 1819, a boy of sixteen, and from the day of his landing never saw England, and with the locomotive he made his first acquaintance when the East Indian Railway extended their line from Buxar to Arrah in 1862. By way of compensation he had seen a good deal of life of a kind that is strange to the present generation, having been resident during the Nepal War at the frontier station of Malar, and having taken an active part in the guerilla warfare that was rife in the Shahabad district during 1857-58. His factory was plundered and burnt down by the rebels in the course of the Mutiny, but when order was restored he obtained a grant of land from Government for his services, which materially increased the value of his property. Here Mr. Drummond settled down and passed the remainder of his days, equally respected and liked by his European friends, and by the Natives of the country among whom he had made his home.—Indian Chrouicle.

THE first meeting of the Conference Committee appointed by the Prince of Wales, the Executive President of the Royal Commission, was held on Tuesday, at the Society of Arts—the Duke of Manchester presiding. The committee considered the question of conferences and lectures at the Exhibition, and appointed a small sub-committee to prepare a scheme. The committee propose to arrange for a series of lectures or papers on the different classes of products illustrated in the Exhibition, and they hope to be able to secure the assistance of qualified experts to deal with such subjects as food resources, timber supply, agricultural resources, textile fibres, &c. It is also proposed to arrange for the reading of papers on the resources of the Colonies individually.

It is always gratifying to find a Native, or Native-edited, paper which is satisfied with any single thing that is; so we are glad to see the composition of the Lords' contingent of the future Indian Committee approved by some of these journals. Here is one:—

Lord Northbrook has been appointed President of the Parliamentary Committee for the inquiry into Indian affairs. This is an excellent appointment, and will be hailed with delight all over India. The following peers will serve as members:—Duke of Norfolk, Duke of Buckingham, Marquis of Ripon, Earl of Derby, Earl of Cadogan, Earl of Kimberley, Earl of Northbrook, Earl of Lytton, Earl of Iddesleigh, Earl of Cranbrook, Lord Harris, Lord Elgin, Lord Napier of Magdala, Lord Revelstoke, and Lord Hobhouse. We have here an ex-Governor, three ex Viceroy, four Secretaries of State, one Under-Secretary of State, one ex-Commander-in-Chief, and one ex-Law Member. The concentrated wisdom and experience of India will be found in the constitution of the Committee. We hope the batch of Commoners will be equally satisfactory.

OTHER journals complain of the whole thing as little better than a farce. The following are typical utterances. Says the Yezdan Parast:—

Though there was not the slightest chance of the Ministry changing their minds about the Committee of Inquiry, we think the Bombay people have not done well to stop the public meeting which was to have been held last Monday. We should have at least recorded our protest and kept ourselves in evidence before the English public.

The list of the Peers is (thinks the Indu Prakash) a fairly good one, though regret may be expressed that we miss one or two names in it which might well have been included in the list. But the list of Commoners is discouraging. Nearly all the retired Anglo-Indian gentlemen in Parliament, who are hostile to Native progress, have been chosen. We do not expect much from a Committee so carelessly formed. It is not likely, however, to endure long. Parliament will have to be dissolved ere long, and with it the Committee will go. The sooner it is smashed the better, perhaps.

The Bombay Samachar says that the nomination of the sixteen members of the House of Commons to serve on the Parliamentary Committee will be received with deep regret throughout the length and breadth of India. Notwithstanding that the Liberals and Conservatives have been equally divided, the composition of the Committee is such as will prove disadvantageous to the interests of India. Amongst the Liberals there are certain members, who are not much known to India, and among the Conservatives unfortunately there are many who are the avowed enemies of the country. The Indians will naturally be afraid of men like Lord Lytton, Sir Richard Temple, Sir James Fergusson, Sir Lewis Pelly, and Mr. Maclean, who have all been known to be unfriendly to them. The constitution of the Committee, says the paper, is a sore disappointment, and there are hardly any hopes entertained of such a Committee doing any good to the country.

The Jam-i-Jamshed says that the nomination in the Committee of the members of the House of Commons is not so satisfactory as that of the House of Lords. There are a few good men appointed on the Committee, but some are known to be opposed to the interests of this country. The paper considers it very unfortunate to India that Mr. Maclean should have been appointed on the Parliamentary Committee. India would have become satisfied with half the number of the Committee, provided Mr. Maclean had not been appointed to serve on it.

THE Bombay Native papers generally are dissatisfied with the resolution issued by Government on the report made to them by the Abkari Commission. The East Gofar, writing upon the subject, says that the publication of the Abkari Commission report has now been long delayed by Government, and it is now hoped that in order that the public may be in a better position to compare the recommendations of the Commission with the resolution issued by Government on the subject, their report will soon be allowed to see the light of day. According to the resolution Government appear to be on all fours with certain recommendations of the Commission; and it is very disappointing that certain other recommendations of the Commission arrived at by them after a strict examination of witnesses and mature deliberation should have been disregarded. The Commission themselves have not in the first place recommended all the reasonable concessions asked by those affected by the Abkari Law, and when Government choose to disregard such half-hearted recommendations, the grievances and complaints of the liquor sellers may be said to have been but partially remedied even in some important particulars. The Government have, no doubt, made concessions, but they are so few that it is no wonder if the public generally feel themselves dissatisfied and disappointed in their expectations.

We read in the Englishman that negotiations are in progress to extend the South Indian Railway into Travancore. Such an undertaking would do much to remove the comparative isolation of the prosperous little State, and is deserving of all encouragement.

It will be long ere infant-marriage is checked; but something has been attained, if its occurrence be thought worthy of publicity. The Bombay Guardian says:—"Only the 23rd of last month (February) two Parsee marriages took place, one of which was between a bridegroom aged eight years and a bride aged three, and the other between a bridegroom aged eight and a bride aged four. The average age of the four was less than six years. Such marriages are, of course, unknown among Persians, and we have here just another illustration of the extent to which the Parsees who settled in India became Hinduized."

AFTER the marked depression in the rice trade of Rangoon during the past two official years, 1883-84 and 1884-85, it is refreshing, says the Rangoon Gazette, to have to report a large comparative increase in the transactions of the current official year. As it stands, the quantity of this cereal exported hence during the past two and a-half months is nearly 48,000 tons in excess of the shipments during the corresponding period in 1885, which amounted to about 168,000 tons only. But for the disturbances in the districts, the out-turn of paddy might have been appreciably larger, and the shipments correspondingly larger also.

INDIA COUNCIL REMITTANCES.—These seem still to go from bad to worse. The course of the Indian exchanges during the past week has been one of steady depression. The Indian export trade is quiet, and while rates have been daily and almost continuously declining, the India Council has not shown much disposition to restrict its drawings. Thirty lacs were offered on Wednesday, and twenty-three lacs were placed at prices ranging from ls. 5½d. to ls. 5¾d. per rupee for bills, and ls. 5¾d. to ls. 5½d. per rupee for transfers. The minimum rates were ½d. down for both bills and transfers, and applicants at the minimum prices received all they asked for; but as there is no difficulty in obtaining private allotments at low rates, the reduction has not steadied the market. The Indian rates of exchange now current are the lowest on record. This week only twenty lacs of Council Bills will be offered for tender. From April 1st to April 13th inclusive, the Council had granted remittances for Rs.28,31,000, realising £286,464. To the corresponding date last year Rs.78,78,700, realising £619,472, had been disposed of.

Chit Chat.

THE Calcutta Municipality Commission and the Government of India are likely ere long to come to blows, consequent on the refusal of the former to impose an increased tax so as to meet expenditure for sanitary improvements; in other words, the Commissioners have rejected the advice of the "Burra Lords Sahib," and what then? Time will show.

WHAT is an "exceptionally brilliant ball?" Year after year it is customary to characterise each successive gathering of the mighty of the land as an unusually splendid affair. Obviously, then, either this is untrue, or previous meetings must have been failures. There is no escape from the dilemma.

SIR CORNER PETHERAM goes from the Bench in the North-West Provinces to the highest post in Bengal, much to the delight, it is said, of Sir A. Lyall, in whose side the independent-minded man of law was a constant thorn. This it is said is lamentable, but is it true?

WHEN the Fort of Gwalior was restored to the Maharajah Scindia, the tune played by the British troops, who mustered on the occasion, was "Tommy make room for your uncle." The bandmaster must possess a keen sense of the eternal fitness of things!

THE Pioneer castigates the Daily News in regard to Greece. "When it was announced that Lord Salisbury had joined the other great Powers to coerce Greece, the indignation of the Daily News knew no bounds. It declared that under no circumstances was such a policy admissible, and did all it could to make the matter a party question. To its astonishment Mr. Gladstone decided to adhere to Lord Salisbury's views—views as to the propriety of which there can be no question—and the Daily News had to justify in Mr. Gladstone what it denounced in Lord Salisbury. A revolution on its own axis had to be effected. This has not, as this mail shows, been very skilfully performed. Mr. Gladstone says the intrepid journal may threaten and even chastise the Greeks because he loves them; Lord Salisbury may not, because he hates them. The argument is beneath contempt." Of course it is, but why break a fly on a wheel—what need bother about what the Daily News may or may not say?

An officer, unable on account of the state of his health to return to duty within the maximum period of two years' absence, will, unless he is under Rule 2 specially granted an extension of leave without pay, be placed on temporary half pay or the retired list, as the circumstances of the case may seem to require. An officer will also be liable to be placed on half pay or the retired list should his health require an undue amount of leave, whether in or out of India. This power will be exercised at the instance of the Government of his own Presidency should the officer be in India, or, should he be at home, by the Secretary of State in Council.

4. All leave in or out of India will count as service for pension.

5. Leave, whether it is leave in India or leave out of India, will not involve forfeiture of appointment, and may be granted at any time, but solely at the discretion of the Commanders-in-Chief of the several armies for officers serving directly under their orders, and by the Governor-General in Council or the Governors in Council for officers of civil departments of the Army or of Corps not under the direct orders of a Commander-in-Chief.

6. An officer on leave, whether in India or out of India, will be required to rejoin at once on being recalled to duty, unless certified by a Medical Board as unfit to do so.

Officers applying for leave of any kind within that period must elect on making their application. Officers already on leave at date of promulgation must elect at once, and the new rules will apply to them from the date on which their notification of acceptance shall be received at either Army Headquarters, or by the Government of India, or by the Local Governments, or at the India Office at home, as the case may be. Officers in civil employ on that date, subsequently reverting to military duty, who may elect them within six months from the date of being replaced at the disposal of the Military Department, and such officers who may be on leave when so replaced must make their election at once. Those taking leave within the six months must make their election before going on leave. They shall not apply to officers in civil employ. Officers commanding divisions, districts, or brigades, or holding other appointments under special regulations as to leave of absence, who will continue subject to such regulations.

8. Officers who, under Rule 7, elect to come under them will count all previous leave as service for pension. The position of those who do not so elect will remain unchanged.

9. The Secretary of State in Council reserves the right of making any change in the foregoing regulations which circumstances may require.

The above rules, but with the scale of pay given below, will apply to officers of the Indian Medical Service whose admission to the Service shall bear date subsequent to the 30th June, 1886, and to those in military employment who may elect them within twelve months of that date:—

After arrival in India on first appointment ... £200 a year.

OCEANA; OR, ENGLAND AND HER COLONIES.*

The excogitation of a great mind on a great subject can never be otherwise than welcome. In the present case a glimpse at what Mr. Froude has to tell us will serve to indicate that "Oceana" is a valuable and instructive volume, the pleasure and the profit to be derived therefrom being interwoven into such a homogeneous whole that it is not easy to say where one begins and the other ends.

On 18th January—the summer of the Antipodes—the party stepped ashore on the harbour of Adelaide. Fifty years ago the city was a mud swamp; now it can boast of broad quays and handsome streets, tasteful churches, fine public buildings, and all the outward tokens of thriving prosperity and ambitious energy. But the one circumstance which seemed to impress itself upon a stranger thus entering its midst was that it "is England still, and England at its best."

But if Adelaide was a "great thing" Melbourne was "a real wonder." "The splendid docks there were choked with ships loading and unloading. Huge steamers—five, six, or seven thousand tons—from all parts of the world, were lying round us or beside us. In the distance we saw the smoke of others. Between us and the city there seemed scarcely to be room for the vessels anchored there; from their masthead or stern the English flag blowing out proud and free, and welcoming us to Australia as to a second home. Steam launches, steam ferry boats, tugs, coasting steamers were flying to and fro, leaving behind them, alas! black volumes of smoke, through which the city loomed large as Liverpool." Again it is recorded that the city belikens English life, English society, English habits, English aspirations, English amusements. "Nothing strange, nothing created."

Scarce had the visitors "eaten the air of Melbourne" than they were whisked by train to Ballarat, a prosperous town in the wilderness, the outcome of the gold mania, to which it owes its existence. Conspicuous amongst its attractions is a magnificent park, possibly the finest in the whole world; "such variety, such splendour of colour, such sweetness, such grace in the distribution of the treasures collected there I had never found combined before, and never shall find again." This is the witness of Mr. Froude. Again, the testimony of the visitors was that the whole place was thoroughly English.

If, however, this lovely park was exquisite to a degree, the public gardens at Sydney, whither the travellers next bent their steps, must have approached very near in point of beauty. "The ground slopes from the town to the sea with inclining lawns, flower-beds, and the endless variety of the tropical flora; tall Norfolk Island pines tower up dark into the air, and grand walks wind for miles among continually varying landscapes which are framed by the openings in the foliage of the perfumed shrubs." The City was at the time in the fever of excitement. English troubles in the Soudan were at the thickest, and the Colony had offered a Contingent to aid the mother-country. Would the offer be accepted? The answer arrived when Mr. Froude was in the town, and he bears witness to the loyalty which prompted the people of Sydney to lend a helping hand, and the political sagacity which, for once, rose equal to the occasion when it accepted the service thus tendered. In the town, as elsewhere, the pulse was Australian pulse, but the blood was the blood of England.

A run of six days in an American steamer brought the sight-seers to the quay of Auckland, in New Zealand, a city rapid in its progress, but according to the testimony of the travellers destined to trouble when its power of borrowing came to an end. At present all is merry, blithe, and calm, yet a city preying on its own vitals cannot last; and it may be feared that when the shock comes many a family will experience that rude awakening which follows national folly and shortsightedness. Meanwhile the wanderer can find much to admire in the city, with its superb harbour, its noble university, its busy haunts and quiet nooks; while a trip to the celebrated "Terraces" in the interior of the island affords a sight which can never be seen elsewhere—a sight the glories of which no pen has ever succeeded in adequately depicting, and the beauties of which language may well despair to describe.

Again, the testimony is that the colony is English in its ways, a reflex of the old country, to which the colonial settlers owed their origin. If the Oceana be linked to our own country by all the ties of blood, of sentiment, of similarity of thought, and of harmony of feeling, cannot all the colonies be federated into one grand empire, able to withstand the shock of a world in arms? Cannot some scheme be devised calculated to draw tighter the bonds which link the two hemispheres in one embrace of love, affection, and esteem? Surely no more noble dream could flit before the imagination of the statesman, or rack the brain of those charged with a problem, the successful solution of which would bring incalculable benefits to the empire at large?

Want of judgment and lack of sympathy lost us America. Shall it be written thrice in the annals of this kingdom that Downing-street has been weighed in the balance and found wanting? It will not be the fault of Mr. Froude if such prove to be the case. He has expressed in clear and unmistakable terms the dangers, the difficulties of the position; he has warned, he has suggested. All that mortal man can do he has done, and if he should succeed in drawing public attention to the one great and glorious task of uniting us more closely with our Colonies—a task which has filled his brain with the most ardent enthusiasm, and engendered the most noble aspirations in his bosom—then, indeed, he will not have written in vain the fascinating and instructive account of his travels and travellings in the regions of "Oceana."

THE INDIAN MAGAZINE.*

Putting for the moment aside the continuation of Dr. Thornton's valuable paper on "The Vernacular Literature and Folklore of the Punjab," which attracted the attention of Oriental scholars when first printed in "The Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society," the two papers on "Caste, by a Kashmiri Pandit," and that on Mr. Nesfield's "Caste System of the North-West Provinces of India," are, perhaps, the pièces de résistance of the last number of this very well-edited periodical. Mr. J. B. Knight's review of Mr. Nesfield's important book enumerates in adequate detail the principal castes in a part of Hindostan where (probably owing, among other causes, to frequent intermarriages) the original broad distinction between Hindoos and Mahometans has been in some cases obliterated. Interesting instances are given of changes from one caste to another, as (p. 137) of Baris having imperceptibly "raised themselves into the ranks of Brahmanism." Curious, too, to read of the Chamar caste—"the field slave, the grass cutter, the remover of dead animals, the hide-skinner, and the carrion-eater, of the village"—that some have learnt English, and have become native doctors, "a profession well suited to their traditions, as they do not share in the objections felt by some of the higher castes to the use of the dissecting knife." This review of the caste system is continued in the April, and it is to be further touched on in a subsequent number, when we may have space to refer to it at greater length.

The "Kashmiri Pandit," in a very well written and well argued paper, approaches the subject of caste from an entirely different point of view, denying its beneficial social effects, ridiculing its artificial restrictions, and, in short, condemning it in toto. We have space for little more than the conclusion of his article (the whole of which is well worth reading), with which we must end the present notice. His main point is, that "Caste in Modern India is a mischievous institution, and, the sooner it is done away with the better." And, with this as his text, he winds up his discourse in the following words, the more remarkable as coming from a Pandit:—"My impression is, that modern and ancient civilization are incompatible with each other. The central idea of the one is progress, that of the other fixity: the one tests its intellectual and moral problems by their agreement with the past; the other seeks for their solution in the future. Between these antagonistic forces no artificial compromise is possible. I say artificial, because a natural compromise is going on, which no mortal hand can touch. The stationary spirit of ancient civilization has taken its refuge in caste; the progressive spirit of modern civilization is best manifested in a free scientific education. The caste system was maintainable, and, perhaps, rightly, when those who belonged to the privileged caste were really superior to others in intellect and humanity. But now, when popular education is daily spreading in India, casting the sympathies and aspirations of all classes into an intellectual mould, caste has become obsolete—standing in the midst of a tide of new ideas, as the one solitary rock of a continent that has now been washed away."

The April number, too, contains some articles which will attract the reader's attention. Such are, in particular, the paper on Lady Dufferin's Fund, in which the first annual report is commented on in terms of well-merited praise, and the sketch, at p. 217, of the arrangements made by Messrs. Cook, under contract with the Government of India, for the conveyance to Mecca of Indian pilgrims. It is not too much to say that, in concluding this contract, the Government have made a great stride in winning the sympathies of the Indian Moslem world. Last, but by no means as regarding it as of minor importance, we must mention the annual report of the Association (which was "taken as read" at their late meeting) as a conscientious record of good work well performed.

over the face of the globe, must of necessity be much felt. It is intended, not as a map of the interior of the various countries of the world, but only of the ports, and the various sea routes which connects them with the British Isles, the distances from England being added to the list of information. A model of clearness, the work is sure to be popular, if only that the publication is, we believe, the first of its sort other than the somewhat incomprehensible charts "used by navigators but not easily to be understood" by persons untrained in the art of seamanship.

TWENTY-ONE DAYS IN INDIA.*

We are really glad to see another edition of a book which will not easily be surpassed for facetious delineation of things acutely observed by an entirely cynical eye. It is all plums—paste being conspicuous by its absence—and is as fresh on a second and third, as it was on a first, perusal.

OBITUARY.

—O—

GENERAL W. N. CUSTANCE, C.B., 11th HUSSARS.—We reproduce with pleasure the enclosed letter, addressed to our Calcutta contemporary, the Statesman, respecting the services of the above gallant officer; and are glad to repair our previous omission to do them justice in this column at the time of his decease:—

SIR,—Death has lately made sad havoc in the ranks of distinguished Anglo-Indians. Hardly has the cold turf closed upon the remains of General Wilson, when we hear of another hero of the Indian Mutiny having joined the silent majority. The home papers, received by the last mail, contain the intelligence of the death of General W. N. Custance, of the 11th Hussars. The bare mention of this gallant officer's name brings back to memory the dark days of the Sepoy Revolt, and the prominent part he took in quelling the rebellion. Had his advice been accepted, it is more than probable that the rising might have been nipped in the bud, and the terrible massacre which followed been averted. General Custance was born about the year 1811, and entered the Cavalry in 1831. He served with distinction in the Crimea from August 1855, taking part in the battle of Tchernaya and the siege and fall of Sebastopol, for which he received several decorations. In 1856 he was promoted to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy, and assumed command of the 6th Dragoon Guards—the Carabineers—at Meerut. It was on the evening of Sunday, the memorable 10th of May, 1857, that the Sepoys and troopers, after setting fire to their lines, and murdering some of their officers, who rushed up to the parade ground, in the vain hope that their presence might allay the irritation, took the road to Delhi to commit similar atrocities there. Colonel Custance saw at a glance where the danger lay, and he lost no time in calling upon General Hewett, commanding the station, and begged to be permitted to lead the Carabineers against the rebels, as also to allow the battalion of the 60th Rifles, forming part of the garrison, to follow him, promising at the same time that not a single sepoy trooper would reach his destination. But the decrepit old General, whose legitimate place was on the pension list, halted between the bugbear of responsibility and his plain duty to his country. It has been said that Colonel Custance once entertained the idea of acting on his own responsibility, but he was advised otherwise. The golden opportunity was lost, and what followed is a matter of history. For the next two years the gallant Colonel was engaged in a consecutive series of campaigns, including the affair of the Hindun, the engagement at Badle-ke-serai, and the siege of Delhi. He commanded the whole of the Irregular Cavalry under Sir Hope Grant, the 9th Lancers at the storming of Delhi, and the cavalry of Brigadier Showers' column during subsequent operations. He was in command of his own regiment and Hodson's Horse at the capture of the fortress of Kanound; and, also in command of the Carabineers and the 2nd Bengal Fusiliers, surprised the city of Furrucknuggur, and made the Nawab prisoner. He was present in the action of Bunkagaon in October, 1858, and also in the campaign in Oudh which followed, including the action of Mahondipore and Russolpore, the advance on and capture of the fortress of Mitondi, and the actions of Aligunj and Bishwa. He joined the Agra Field Force by forced marches, and commanded a wing of the Carabineers in the famous three months' pursuit of Tantia Topee through Rajpootana and Central India. For his services in India he received the thanks of the Governor-General in Council, was frequently mentioned in despatches, and obtained the medal with clasp, the brevet rank of Colonel, and was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Bath. He became Major-General in 1868, Lieutenant-General in 1877, and a General in 1880. He had held the Colonelcy of the 11th Hussars since 1875.—A. S.

MAJOR-GENERAL WILLIAM GRAY, BOMBAY ARMY.—We have to record the death of this officer, at Paris, at the age of sixty-one. The deceased entered the Army in 1845, and served with the Bombay Column in the Punjab Campaign of 1848-49, being severely wounded at the siege of Mooltan. He was also employed in the Commissariat Department during the Persian War of 1856-57, for his services in which he obtained a brevet-majority. He attained the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in 1868, of Colonel in 1874, and of Major-General in 1875.

MOFUSSIL JUDICIAL WORK IN BENGAL.

THE excellent Minute in which Mr. Justice Prinsep, of the Calcutta High Court, has embodied the results of his inspection of some of the Mofussil Courts in Bengal, contains much which well deserves the attention of the Governments of that, and of other, Provinces. The system of inspection, by a Judge of the Supreme Court, of the subordinate tribunals, is no new one, having, indeed, been inaugurated by the much-abused Sir Elijah Impey. But it has of late years fallen into desuetude; and even the officers presiding in Courts of lower rank than the High Court do not, so far as can be gathered from the Minute, seem to have any held regular inspection of the subordinate tribunals. In 1865, indeed, two Judges of the High Court made a complete inspection of the Courts at the headquarters of every district in the Province; and in 1875 the Courts of four districts were similarly inspected by one Judge; but, as our Lahore contemporary pertinently remarks, if these are the only occasions on which subordinate judicial offices have been visited and examined by superior authority during the last twenty years, it is small wonder that the state of affairs now brought to light is rather startling in some particulars. Inspections regularly performed and reported by Civil and Sessions Judges would have afforded the High Court ample opportunities of bringing abuses to the notice of Government and of suggesting remedies. Two things are especially needed, more men and better Courts. As regards the former a considerable portion of the Minute is devoted to showing how justice is starved, as it were, by the persistent refusal or neglect of the Government to provide anything like an adequate judicial agency; a refusal, or neglect, for which the enormous surplus revenue derived from litigation deprives the authorities of any excuse. The work, as far as it can be performed with a wholly inadequate staff of officers, is so well done that it leaves not very much to be desired. Mr. Prinsep, indeed, expressly says:—

The work is intelligently, carefully, and regularly done. . . . and as all Courts are notoriously overworked, I was not inclined to attach very great importance to what I regarded as comparatively small matters of detail. Such criticisms seemed to me to be more likely to discourage officers, whose zeal and devotion to the Service cannot be too highly commended, than, in the present state of the work, to bring about any very necessary improvement.

No man, however much a "glutton for work," has the power of doing more than a certain quantity, and the inevitable result ensues. "Some time ago," we read in another article on this most important subject, "when writing about the prevalence of fatal disease among the subordinate Judicial Service, we drew the attention of Government to the unusual amount of work generally thrown upon them." Nor is it possible that they should keep abreast of it. Consequently it falls into arrears, and we have complaints of the constant and indefinite postponements of contested suits; "a case being rarely tried on the day fixed for it, unless it promises to be a simple one, or is decided ex parte; and the almost complete neglect of matters connected with the execution of decrees—this important branch of the judicial business being left to the tender mercies of the amlah," who, of course, too often will not act unless roundly feed. The perpetual postponement of contested cases has become been an evil so serious that a subordinate Native Judge (Munsif) who should endeavour to remedy it in his own Court would suffer for his conscientious zeal. It is something when a Judge of the High Court has to write that a Munsif bold enough to do his duty in this respect, and to take contested cases on the day fixed, would become extremely unpopular. "He will," we read, "earn the unenviable reputation of being summary and unjust, complaints will be made everywhere in the Native Press anonymously to all his superiors in turn, until they reach the High Court, and even the Government. His labours to restore order will not be recognised, for his orders will, on appeal, be set aside by the subordinate judge; the cases being returned for re-trial. He will become disheartened, and he will probably suffer in promotion for the unfavourable reputation he has earned, without proper inquiry into its cause."

As if to add to the burdens of excessive work, it has to be performed in the most unsuitable places; nor can anything well be worse than the insufficient and inappropriate accommodation generally given to the subordinate Judicial Courts. Mr. Prinsep very justly characterises these as "hovels unfit for human habitation—dark, badly ventilated, and filthy." "In Hazeepore the Munsiff's Court is held in a dirty, dark kutchah bungalow; in Burrisal four Munsiff's are huddled together in a dirty dilapidated house, one of them sitting in an exposed side verandah indifferently protected by a slanting mat from sun and rain. At Jessore, though there are magnificent ranges of offices for the revenue and magisterial officers, and spacious accommodation, and 'æsthetic brick buildings' for even the post office and registration office, one of the Munsiffs holds his Court in a hut affording a striking contrast to the neighbouring houses." The contrast between the accommodation provided for the Judicial and the Executive Services is equally remarkable. Mr. Prinsep observes that while "the deputy magistrate lives in a comfortable building belonging to Government, the Munsif must be content with the best lodging that he can procure; and when his Court is often placed in a small village, the only lodging procurable is so unsuitable that he is forced to send his wife and family to his home."

We see no reason for this difference, as to accommodation, between two branches of the Government Service. One very strong instance comes before us as we write.

"We are told," writes a Calcutta contemporary, "that in Arrah, after a long correspondence extending over four years, sanction was given to the erection of Civil Courts, and materials were even collected, but, because the bricks were required for some other Department, they were subsequently removed and the matter allowed to be held in abeyance." Mr. Prinsep has done well in calling attention to the lamentable inadequacy, both of pers onnel, and of proper accommodation, in the subordinate Judicial Service; in Bengal, and, inferentially, in other parts of the country, and there is reason to entertain a confident hope that his tour will not have been taken, nor his Minute written, in vain.

THE STRANGERS' HOME FOR ASIATICS.

IN another column we give a condensed account of the annual meeting, held on the 15th April, of this admirable Institution, which, as we learn from the report, has been, like many other charitable establishments, sorely tried by the badness of the times, and the general depression, nowhere more severely felt than in the shipping trade. Seamen have not, indeed, been turned from the hospitable doors to perish in misery in the dreary East-end streets. But those who have been received have, far more frequently than in former years, been unable to pay anything whatever towards the expenses of their maintenance, and a serious deficit has been the inevitable result.

The work done has been well done: nearly 700 men having been received into the Home during 1885 (117 more than in the previous year), of whom but 52 remained there at the year's close, the others having been shipped and disposed of during the twelve months.

It is gratifying to learn that shipping masters at British outports have now generally adopted the plan of remitting the wages of crews, and sometimes of individuals, to the Home (to be received by the men on their arrival), in the shape of Seamen's Money Orders; this has gone far to protect many a seaman, inexperienced in the ways of waterside London, from the extortion, rascality, and vice, which are so rife in that quarter, and to which he probably would otherwise have fallen a ready victim.

The half-caste adventurer is as great a puzzle to deal with here, as our European "loafers" are in India. Of these the Report says, "that they have become more numerous of late years, and seem likely to increase. Last year they were no less than fifty-one. Some of them reached England with money in hand, but they beat about town in search of some good position, until they were broken down, and then they came to the Home. Many others arrived in the country destitute. As they were almost all mere landmen, they were a heavy burden on the Home, for, at the best, it was long before they could be placed in a crew, as many employers refused to take them on any conditions. Frequently there was no opportunity until some large steamer was leaving with a crush of passengers, and then perhaps one, or two, or three, would be engaged to assist the steward as saloon waiters, and so to work their way home, fortunate if they could obtain a nominal sum for their services, but never receiving sufficient to enable them to reduce the debt which they owed to the Home for board and lodging." So that they were practically a dead loss to the institution, which wisely fosters a spirit of independence among its inmates, by requiring them to make a contribution, however inadequate, towards the very considerable cost of their maintenance.

In no respect does the Charity shine, in our opinion, more than in the very moderate sum allotted for expenses of management; in this respect contrasting most favourably with that large number of so-called Charitable institutions which build palatial residences for Treasurers, have splendid offices in expensive quarters of the town, and exist as much for the support of Secretaries and their staff as for the advantage of the people whom they profess to benefit. We know no charity the annual appeal on behalf of which to the liberality, of Anglo-Indians especially, deserves a warmer response.

ASIATIC STRANGERS' HOME.—The annual meeting of the Strangers' Home for Asiatics, South Sea Islanders, &c., took place at the Home in Limehouse on the afternoon of Tuesday last, and was unusually well attended, the large Hall of the Institution being well filled. The chair was taken at three by Sir James Ferguson, Bart., M.P., the late Governor of Bombay. The meeting having been opened with the reading of Scriptures and prayer by the Rev. W. Donne, Rector of Limehouse, the chairman expressed the pleasure he had in presiding on such an occasion, and his high appreciation of the objects of the Institution and the mode in which it was conducted. He apologized for being obliged to leave, however, immediately, as he had to hasten to the House to introduce his brother, who had just been elected as Conservative member for Ipswich. The chair having then been taken by the President of the Board of Directors, the Hon. Captain Maude, R.N., the Hon. Secretary then proceeded to read the Report, including that of the missionary, Rev. G. Small, M.A. The adoption of the Report was then moved by W. Seton Karr, Esq., late Secretary to the Government of Bengal, and seconded by an Indian gentleman, Sowji M. Wadia, Esq., Professor of Sanscrit at the University of Cambridge. The second Resolution, referring to the election, or re-election, of Directors and office-bearers, was proposed by Rev. Dr. W. Goul, formerly Medical Missionary at Swatou, and founder of the Hospital there, and seconded by another Indian young gentleman, L. G. Bhadbhade, Esq., of Balliol College, Oxford. Votes of thanks to the Chairman and the Hon. Secretary, J. H. Fergusson, Esq., having been proposed by General Sir Orfeur Cavenagh, K.C.S.I., &c., and duly seconded and passed, the meeting was concluded by the pronouncing of the Blessing by the Very Rev. ## THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb,
and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to
Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals
throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public
are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Ceremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D., M.R.A.S.,

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary
of the Church Missionary Society,
Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Muhammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary World.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr.
Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopædia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammadan
religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism
as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Muslim faith, the information being in every case
taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources,
with the comments of the best European scholars. . . .
This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Homecraft Mail.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGH,
COLD,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
 CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C.
 BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORO-DYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE IN-VENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr.
 Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.
 This is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
 CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.
 See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.
 GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
 London. REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.
 Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETE-LY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."
 From Symes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

TO J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
 DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars,
 and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of
 DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S
 CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia,
 the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

IS
 SPECIFIC
 CHOLERA.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
 CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in

NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.
 DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
 CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHES, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
 CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRU-PULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists.
 1s. 1½d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, APRIL 27, 1886.

UPWARDS of a year has elapsed since the attempt was made to render ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL more popular in its style, and more interesting in its contents. With this object a vast amount of what was considered dry detail was omitted, and in place thereof more light and readable paragraphs were introduced; while, too, the reviews of books were entrusted to gentlemen whose names were it etiquette to reveal them would command public support and approbation. In many respects the verdict of the public has been favourable, and it is, perhaps, not presumptuous to assert that by a general consensus, what is done is done well; but there seems to be a like unanimity of opinion that the paper should contain more news of a nature to interest those who have friends and relatives in the East. It may be well, it is argued, to learn that a certain high functionary attended a ball at the Government House, Calcutta, and danced with various well-known and admired daughters of Eve; but it is none the less interesting to find that the same individual had been promoted in the Province of Babylon. "This ought ye to have done and not to have left the other undone" is the sentence passed. In these circumstances it behoves the proprietors to bow their heads in humble submission, and to comply with the wishes of the subscribers to the MAIL. On this intent it has been determined to restore the paper to its original size, while retaining the special features which were introduced a twelvemonth since; and it is trusted that this effort to consult the views of patrons and subscribers may meet with general approval.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 9th April; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 7th April.

THE Viceroy and Lady Dufferin have gone to Simla. En route her ladyship laid the foundation stone of the Durbhangah hospital for women and children which the Maharajah intends to build at his own expense.

THE Indian subscription to Lady Dufferin's fund amounts to Rs.1,81,094-8-11.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS arrived in Quetta on April 6th. His Excellency visited several places of strategic importance on the Sind-Peshin line of communications.

GREAT progress has been made with the Quetta Railway. It is expected that the first train will be run into Hurnai in about six weeks' time.

THE mission to Tibet, which was the object of Mr. Colman Macaulay's visit to Pekin, has been finally sanctioned. It will set out from Darjeeling about the end of May.

THE new branch of the Nizam's Guaranteed State Railway to Warangal, eighty-seven miles in length, was opened on Saturday by his Highness in person. Other extensions in connection with this railway are to be carried out. When these are completed the distance from Madras to Calcutta will be shortened by about seven or eight hundred miles. The railway will also open up the Singereni coalfields.

THE Bengal-Nagpore Railway is to run over three immense bridges, namely, the Brahmini, Elb, and Damuda villages. The last will span a waterway half-a-mile in width, and cost Rs. 13,00,000.

THE Government of India has ordered estimates for the survey of a railway from Mandalay to Tounghoo.

TRADE in the Upper Irrawaddy Valley is said to be rapidly reviving, especially between Burma and China.

ATTEMPTS are being made to establish an annual fair at Bhamo. The leaders of the people in the neighbourhood have been invited to co-operate.

It is said that there is much valuable timber and teak in the Upper Irrawaddy Valley, as well as gold and ivory.

SEVERAL formidable gangs of dacoits are on the war-path in Lower Burma, and it is a fact of considerable significance that the recent military reinforcements were called for not on account of any irruption in Upper Burma, but on account of the lawlessness and disorder in the Lower Province.

THE forces in Burma will continue to be under the orders of the Government of India and the Commander-in-Chief in India.

THE Court of Inquiry into Colonel Hooper's case, which has been sitting at Mandalay, has concluded its work. It was composed of Colonel Lowndes, head of the Burma Police, Colonel Bell Kingsley of the Hampshire Regiment, and Major Dale of the Madras Pioneers. The evidence given before the Court has been sent to the Commander-in-Chief, who will in turn forward it to the Viceroy. The Court has not yet been made public.

THE two chief actors in the river expedition to Mandalay have now said farewell to Burma; General Sir Harry Prendergast and his former political officer, Colonel Sladen, have returned to Madras.

THE Government of India have sanctioned recruiting being continued until two new regiments of Goorkhas have been formed.

SIR CHARLES MACGREGOR's health compels him to go home for at least six months. Colonel W. C. Chawne, Commandant 2nd Punjab Infantry, the senior officer in the Frontier Force, will probably officiate during his absence.

MAJOR-GENERAL F. FLOOD has been appointed to the Divisional Staff on the Bombay Army.

DEPUTY-SURGEON COOK has been elected chairman of the Bombay Corporation.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS has confirmed the sentence of dismissal from the Service pronounced by the court-martial held on Lieutenant Hugh Macdonald, 1st Battalion the Border Regiment, on the charge of drunkenness. His Excellency refused to entertain the Court's recommendation to mercy, the prisoner having been tried and convicted once before of a similar offence.

ARRANGEMENTS are being made for locating as many as possible of the young soldiers from England in the hills, during the ensuing season. Standing camps to accommodate 400 each will be formed at Kasauli and Ranikhet; and probably one of the same size at Dalhousie.

It is said that Sir A. Lyall some time ago represented the expediency of establishing a Legislative Council in the North-West Provinces and Oudh, and that the project is now likely to be taken into serious consideration.

THE Judges who have been hearing the appeal, in which Dadajee Bhikajee seeks a restitution of conjugal rights with Rukhmibai, have reversed the decision of Mr. Justice Pinhey. The Court has also remanded the case for a decision on its merits after hearing the defendant's case.

It has been finally decided that the installation of the Maharajah of Cashmere should take place on May 9. The Government of India will be represented by Sir Charles Aitchison.

THE Maharajah of Scindia still continues unwell.

CONSIDERABLE damage has been done to the tea bushes in the western portion of the Terai on the boundary of Nepaul, by a severe hailstorm.

THE total outturn of tea from Assam, according to the returns for the past year supplied by district officers, was 51,126,199 lbs., or 1,045,008 lbs. less than the return of 1883. The average yield per acre for the whole province was 305 lbs.

THE chief news from Ceylon is the exceptionally favourable season experienced for coffee. Everyone who owns any of the old staple in fair cultivation, expects a good crop. The news from the Uva districts is most cheering, and also from Dikoya and other divisions of the Kandy side, where coffee has not been altogether superseded. This access of coffee crop will be an immense help to planters and business men, and to the Natives and the revenue during the coming year, and altogether will tend to strengthen the good position of the colony rapidly being established by tea.

THE salvage of the wrecked P. and O. steamer Indus is proceeding very satisfactorily. All the bullion has been recovered, over 200 chests of indigo and 15 bales of silk.

OBITUARY.—At Minloo, Burma, Lieutenant C. Frank Boileau, 2nd Queen's Own Bengal Native Infantry; at Rohilkhand, Captain W. M. Hearsay; at Lucknow, Rev. Father Norbert, O.C., Roman Catholic Chaplain.

Notes of the Week.

At the opening of the Indian and Colonial Exhibition the second verse of "God save the Queen" is to be sung in Sanskrit from a translation made by Professor Max Müller. This is said to be intended as a compliment to India and the Indian visitors who will be present. But who is to sing it? If Madame Albani will make the attempt she will no doubt lend unexpected melody to the Professor's words. She need not fear criticism regarding their pronunciation, for there will not be many Sanskrit scholars amongst the "Indian visitors." Might not the compliment have been made more pointed, and to Her Majesty, by inviting the Indian visitors to sing a verse of the National Anthem in one of their own vernaculars?

The P. and O. steamer Surat has arrived with a number of Native citizens who will exhibit their crafts in the Court of the Indian Palace, and a number of waiters for the Royal Commission tea-rooms. The Bombay "boy" or the Bengal "Kitmutgar," may yet be a formidable rival in London to the German Kellner.

A STATEMENT which had about it the "air of authority" has gone the round of the Press, to the effect that owing to the appearance of cholera at Brindisi it has been decided that the conveyance of the Indian mails by that route shall be temporarily suspended. The mail steamers will proceed up the Adriatic as far as Trieste, the trains to and from that place taking the Mont Cenis, Turin, Milan route. This will cause a delay of from twenty to twenty-four hours in the arrival of the mails in London! This was circumstantial enough, but it was further stated that the change has been adopted in order to evade the vexatious delays imposed on arrivals from the Italian port of Alexandria, where they undergo quarantine, and to avoid on the other hand the fumigating of homeward bound passengers and letters crossing the French frontier. Who is responsible for this canard, for such it is, as the P. and O. Company have requested its contradiction, and the Indian mails just to hand have arrived via Brindisi?

It will be very satisfactory if the same company will contradict or explain the following taken from the columns of a military contemporary:—

It is, of course, a considerable boon to officers, especially to married ones, to be allowed a passage in one of the troopships when going to or returning from India. It is a matter of considerable saving to not over well-filled pockets in these days of diminishing rupees, and the authorities at home and in India have acted with a wise generosity in granting such passages when there happens to be sufficient accommodation on board. But it is now reported that the granting of such passages has been vetoed at the instance of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, whose directors have protested against an indulgence which competes with their profits. It is difficult to credit this rumour, for the Peninsular and Oriental Company, whose fortunes have been so much helped by carrying military men and their families to and from the East for so many years can best afford of all steamship companies in the world to be a little generous to poor men of the service. It is a company which has long enjoyed a splendid monopoly, and although it does not obtain the former handsome prices from its passengers, owing to the competition of other companies, it is still at the head of its rivals as a profitable commercial enterprise. If the report which has been pretty widely circulated be not true, it ought to be publicly or officially contradicted.

THE Conservatives of Clapham would appear to be interesting themselves in Indian questions, although it seems rather late in the day to fight over again the battle of the Ilbert Bill. This was, however, done last week at a meeting of the Clapham Registration Association, at which Sir Roper Lethbridge was to have presided but was unable to do so from indisposition. Mr. J. Rintoul Mitchell, a former editor of the Calcutta Englishman, was the chief speaker, and, in an address which the Globe describes as "eloquent, interesting and graphic," he informed his hearers that the only successful way of governing India was to double the present number of Civil Servants. "A discussion followed." We should think so.

ACCORDING to a Renter's telegram the disembarkation of the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh at Aden was due to the suggestion of the Indian Government that he should halt at that place until the question of his visit to India had been decided. It is now stated that if he chooses to remain in India he must take up his residence at Ootacamund, and that he will not be permitted to visit Bengal or the Punjab. This decision is hardly to be wondered at after the publication of the extraordinary proclamation which His Highness made to the Sikh nation renouncing Christianity, and taunting the British Government with ungenerous treatment and ingratitude for his "unswerving loyalty to the Empress of India." This proclamation we gave in our columns upwards of a week ago, but it has just made its appearance in the Times without any comment, beyond that of its being "a remarkable address."

THE MAHARAJAH has completely broken up the establishment kept for so many years in Suffolk, and the auctioneers are about to enter upon the sale, on the premises, of all the furniture and contents of Elveden-hall, beginning on the 27th inst. and continuing the sale each day up to the 5th of May inclusive. There is an immense quantity of the most costly and well made furniture, most of it in amboyna wood, with ebony inlay and gilt with ormolu mountings, of the most expensive and elaborate kind of work. Besides these are suites of Indian work in sandal wood, inlaid with ivory, covered in fine Italian needlework and velvets; suites of ebonised furniture inlaid in hard woods with ormolu mounts, and covered with cashmere embroideries; suites of splendid gilt chairs, settees, ottomans, &c., and numerous ornamental pieces of candelabra, stands, vases, plaques, statuettes, fountains, lamps, Sèvres and Dresden china, and a stud of horses. The sale is attracting much attention, and the catalogues, sold at 1s. each, are going off by the thousand.

It is to be hoped that our officers on the Afghan frontier have a liberal supply of warm clothing, for the thermometer seems to range from six to eighteen degrees below zero. Fifty degrees of frost is not bad. Spite, however, of this intense cold they manage to fiddle about with a pencil, as surveying is called in that icy region of eternal failure.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondents.)

APRIL 15.

A daring attempt was made to burn Mandalay this morning by bands of men sent by the Myinzaing Prince, the most formidable of the Alompra Pretenders.

The Burmese year 1248 commenced yesterday. For some days previous threatening notices were circulated in Mandalay, announcing that the beginning of the year would be signalled by the burning of the town. No special precautions were, however, taken by the local authorities.

The town was fired this morning by incendiaries at four, and the walled city in two places. One of the fires in the city extend to the Palace, and the Treasury, the Post-Office, and several other smaller buildings within the Palace enclosures were destroyed. The main buildings of the Palace are uninjured.

The fires began at 4 o'clock A.M. with the kindling of two in the southern part of the town, at some distance from the walled city. The troops turned out, and the fires were extinguished, after a large number of houses had been destroyed.

The soldiers had barely returned to quarters when the alarm was given, just at daybreak, that the southern portion of the town, adjoining the walled city, had been fired in two places. These fires were caused by a band of about fifty men, who had two white flags with them. The fires raged with great fury, destroying some hundreds of houses. The incendiaries, some of whom were on ponies, galloped from place to place, firing the houses. They were pursued by the police and military. Their flags were captured and one prisoner was taken. The incendiaries then retreated towards Amarapoor, and four men belonging to this band were captured later on near the Errakan Pagoda by a party of Madras Cavalry.

At daybreak a band of armed men who had entered the walled city on the previous evening attacked two Europeans, both military apothecaries, near the southern gate of the palace. They killed one, and mortally wounded the other. This band approached by letting themselves down over the ramparts. The police had received notice on the previous night that a body of rebels had entered the walled city, intending to attack it. The police, however, contented themselves with watching some suspected houses, but made no arrests.

When the troops left the walled city at daybreak to proceed to the fires, they found a body of fifty armed Burmese waiting at the southern gate until it was opened, apparently intending to then rush in and assist their confederates within the city.

At about eight o'clock it was discovered that the walled city had been fired in two places. Before these fresh fires were extinguished a large number of houses were destroyed.

More than a third of the walled city has now been burned. Sparks floating from one of the fires in the city ignited some of the buildings in the Palace, and the main building was with difficulty saved.

Soon after daybreak, while the fires were raging, a daring attack was made by a band of Dacoits on the houses of some rich Hindoo traders near the Royal Bazaar, in the heart of the town.

A great panic prevails, as it is announced that the attack will be renewed to-night. General White is taking precautionary measures to check any renewal of the disturbances.

Mr. Bernard and General White were both present in the town during the fires giving directions. The military and civil officers strenuously exerted themselves to check the progress of the flames. Colonel Protheroe, Adjutant-Generals Thirkell and White, and Mr. Thomson, the personal assistant of the Chief Commissioner, particularly distinguished themselves.

The military police from India are anxiously expected. The Burmese police are worse than useless.

APRIL 16.

There were no fires in Mandalay last night, as the town was strongly patrolled. The Dacoits, however, during the night attacked a house near the Royal Bazaar, and were fired on by the troops, three Dacoits being killed and two wounded.

While the town was on fire yesterday 300 of the Nyinzaing Prince's men attacked Yankeen Toung, three miles to the east of Mandalay. A naik and two Sepoy privates were killed, but the rebels were repulsed with a loss of fifteen men killed and many wounded. They returned in a southerly direction.

The body of Mr. Devine, the military apothecary, who was killed yesterday, was found in the city. It had been almost hacked to pieces. To-day the city gates were closed for three hours. The eastern quarter of the city was surrounded by the troops, and all the houses were searched by the police. Some arms were found and some arrests were made. The secretary of the ex-Queen Soopayah-lat, his brother, and another Burmese official were arrested yesterday and charged with having caused the fires.

The present staff of civil officers is altogether inadequate. If it be not increased the country is certain to continue in a disturbed state.

APRIL 18.

Intelligence was received by yesterday's mail from Bhamo that the force of 200 men under Captain Wace, which had been sent to attack the Kacheen Pankan Samba at a village in the hills thirty miles from Bhamo, had been repulsed. The Samba had raided on a Burmese village south of Bhamo, kidnapped villagers, and demanded ransom. Captain Wace's force met with many obstacles, in the shape of felled trees and barricades across the path, during the first day's march in the hills. They carried several strong and resolutely-defended stockades. Captain Wace was wounded in the hand. The next day Captain Lyle took the command, and the force carried another stockade, Captain Lyle being severely wounded. The number of wounded now reached two officers and seven men, and the force halted for the night. As they were encumbered with wounded and were opposed by a large number of Kacheens, it was decided to return to Bhamo. The next morning the Kacheens harassed the retreat, but the rear guard kept them off without any casualties.

General Norman left Bhamo on the day the expedition started. General Griffiths left to-day for Bhamo with a company of the 26th Punjaabee Regiment, further reinforcements being sent to Bhamo.

Considerable activity prevails among the insurgents, a large body of whom are assembled near Ava, which has been strongly reinforced. Kyouksai is menaced by the Myinzaing Prince, and troops have been despatched thither to-day.

Within a week two regiments of good Bengal troops will arrive in Mandalay, and the force at General White's disposal will then be ample to deal with the rebels.

Shoaklanmyo Woon, his brother, and son-in-law, or grandson of Thynadah Minghee, were arrested last evening. There are the strongest reasons for believing that they have intrigued with the rebels and supplied them with information. They will be detained at Akyah, but will not be tried. Shoaklanmyo will take six of his wives with him. These arrests are generally approved. Other prisoners have been arrested for firing the town, and will be prosecuted in the ordinary course. The walled city was again fired yesterday, but little damage was done. Mandalay is quiet, but the people are excited.

It is reported from Tsagain that Mr. Colquhoun, with the police and military under Captain Braddon, made a forced night march on the 16th against a body of Dacoits, who fled; twenty-five of the cavalry and a few mounted Burmese pursued, with the result that eleven of the rebels were killed and seventeen taken prisoners. One hundred head of dacoited cattle were recovered. Our loss was nil. Mr. Colquhoun took several Dacoits with his own hand. Mr. Colquhoun's vigour in dealing with this most troublesome district is much commended.

APRIL 19.

Captain Wace's force, which has been repulsed beyond Bhamo, consisted of two guns, sixty of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, a company of the 26th Punjab Infantry, and some sappers. Full details of the affair have not yet been received, but the retreat is believed to have been mainly due to the want of sufficient means of transport for the wounded. There is considerable activity among the insurgents in various districts. This morning a large band of Shans and Burmese tried to rush the Kyoukmyong station, on the Irrawaddy, twenty miles above Mandalay, but were repulsed with severe loss. Yesterday Major Aitken, R.A., attacked the insurgents in the Shwaybo district, which is again up, routing them, with a loss of fifty men. From Zenthien it is reported that on the 8th inst., near Bawhline, a convoy of carts was attacked. The Naik commanding the escort was killed, a sepoy was wounded, and seven cartloads of stores were carried off. The guard posted at Thayattin attacked the marauders, drove them away, and brought in the remaining cart and the wounded sepoy. During the recent disturbances at Mandalay twenty policemen were killed near the Arrakan Pagoda by dacoits and their arms were carried off.

CALCUTTA, April 18.

The Viceroy arrived at Simla last Monday, and all the departments of the Supreme Government are now established in their summer quarters. There is, however, a report current that Lord Dufferin will return here when the rains set in, in June or July. No Viceroy has spent a summer in Calcutta since Lord Northbrook did so during the Bengal famine, in 1874; and it is not likely that that rumour has any good foundation. It may be true, as is often stated, that Lord Dufferin likes heat and dislikes the climate of Simla; or it may be that he appreciates the evils of the Government burying itself for months in a remote hill-station; but it is certain that any proposal to abandon Simla, even for one season, would be vigorously opposed by the crowd of officials who follow the Viceroy thither annually; and there is only too much reason to believe that their opposition would be supported by the India Office, and that it would be too powerful for even so strong a man as Lord Dufferin to overcome. Simla is likely to continue the Indian capital for the greater part of the year until some great disaster teaches the Government the folly of living apart from the country and the people which they govern.

The Commission on the reduction of expenditure assembled at Simla on the 10th inst. Its meetings not being open to the public, nothing authentic has transpired regarding the proceedings; but it is believed that the first subject for consideration will be the financial contracts between the Supreme and the Provincial Governments. It is stated also that each member has had one department or head of expenditure allotted to him, with a view to his examining it thoroughly and submitting suggestions to the entire body of the Commission. Before going to Simla Mr. Elliot, president of the Commission, and Mr. Cunningham had lengthened discussions with the Governments of Bengal and the North-West Provinces; and it is probable that in the course of the summer some or all of the Commissioners will visit the capitals of other provinces.

The Commander-in-Chief seems determined to make a most thorough survey of the frontier defences. On his return from Beloochistan he went to Kurrachee, where he arrived on Friday. To-day he starts from Peshawur, whence he will examine the Khyber, and the posts in that direction; after which he will join the Government at Simla.

The Bill for a reorganisation of the Calcutta Municipality, which has been introduced in the Bengal Legislative Council, proposes to effect considerable and, so far as can be judged at present, very salutary changes in the existing system. The city and its suburbs are to be united under one municipality, thus enabling the water supply and conservancy arrangements, which have done so much to check disease within the town, to be extended to the plague spots outside the present municipal boundary. The Government will relieve the city of the charge of supporting the police, and so set free the police rate for purposes of sanitation. The inner committee of the Corporation known as the Town Council will be reduced from its present unwieldy number—thirty—to ten, and its members will receive a small fee for each meeting. No further step will be taken with the Bill till November, the intermediate time being devoted to the collecting of opinions and criticisms. Possibly it will be much changed before it is finally passed; but it may be hoped that whatever form it may eventually take, it will mitigate, if not altogether sweep away, the abuses which have made the Calcutta municipal administration a scandal to British India.

The new furlough rules for the Staff Corps, lately sanctioned by the Secretary of State, were published last week. They do not appear to give satisfaction to the officers, as they are in many respects less liberal than those recommended by the Indian Government. It is felt also to be a great mistake that instead of passing one set of rules for all officers, as the Indian Government proposed, the Secretary of State has retained the system of calling upon each officer to elect the rules under which he will take his leave.

The Mysore Government has established a mining department for the purpose of making a thorough examination of all auriferous reefs in the State and for the regulation of grants of mining concessions.

Scindia's health is said to be slowly improving, but he is still very weak.

The greater portion of the property contained in the registered letter bag recently stolen from the Calcutta General Post Office has been recovered. A sorter has confessed to having taken the bag, with the help of some other employés, and has pointed out the place where the plunder was hidden. The accused has been sent before a magistrate.

Some experiments have been successfully made on the Indus Valley Railway in running locomotives fired with petroleum; and it seems likely that the frontier railway engines will before long derive their fuel from the oil wells near Sibi.

KARAWAL KHANA, MURGHAB VALLEY, APRIL 17.

The Commissions met to-day and will march towards the Oxus to-morrow.

No settlement of the difficulties that have been raised has as yet been effected.

CALCUTTA, APRIL 25.

The mass meeting of the ryots which was held at Junkergatchi last month has been followed by two similar gatherings—one at Seven Tanks, in the suburbs of Calcutta, the other at the sacred shrine of Tarkessur, in the Hooghly district. The latter of these, which took place last Sunday, is said to have attracted 20,000 ryots, who passed a series of resolutions expressing regret at the collapse of the Parliamentary Committee inquiry, a desire for the reconstitution of the Legislative Councils, and disapproval of certain Bills now pending before the Provincial Legislature. Amusements and spectacles of various sorts formed a feature of this as of the previous meetings; and there can be no doubt that the size of the assembly was due rather to the prospect of amusement than to any real wish to ventilate grievances. The Native newspapers lay great stress upon the importance of these meetings, describing them as signs of awakening natural life. But it is easy to over-estimate this importance, and it is probably not too much to say that nine-tenths of those present had never heard of the proposed Parliamentary Committee and cared nothing about the composition of the Indian Legislative Councils.

At the same time these events are not without a certain importance, if only as an example of the persistence of a small body of wirepullers and of the perfection which their organisation is gradually attaining. The Natives have now learnt the lesson how to agitate, and evidently they mean to use it. There exists in each Presidency town, and especially in Calcutta, an active, energetic body of professional agitators, who are rapidly spreading a network of corresponding societies over the country. They will soon be, if they are not already, able to convoke an imposing meeting at any place and at any moment, and by a judicious intermixture of fireworks and open-air plays to attract thousands of ignorant peasants, who listen patiently to speeches which they do not understand, and who, as they express no dissent, are described as eagerly assenting to resolutions carefully prepared beforehand. One remarkable feature about this movement is that so far it is entirely confined to Hindoos. Hitherto the Mahomedans have kept altogether aloof, in spite of the efforts which have been made to draw them into it. It is impossible to say how long they will continue to resist the efforts made. It would be premature to say that this agitation has yet attained the stage of being politically dangerous. The leaders always profess loyalty to British rule and a desire to attain their ends by constitutional means, and it is to be hoped that their professions are true. If those leaders would postpone their political aspirations and turn their attention to more immediate and pressing questions of social reform—to the abolition of caste, of infant marriage, of enforced widowhood, and the thousand evils of Indian life—it would be impossible to feel anything but sympathy with them. The word, however, seems to have gone forth that social reform can wait. It will doubtless be long before England gives these agitators the Parliamentary institutions which they desire. It is not likely that their meetings will shake the stability of British rule; but it would be well if the Government gave them and their efforts more attention than it has hitherto given and kept a closer watch upon a movement which, whether for good or evil, is certainly a new and not unimportant phase in Indian politics.

More or less vague rumours continue to circulate to the effect that, notwithstanding the statements to the contrary, all is not yet going on well in Bhopal. It is known that the Begum has been allowed to dispense with the services of the Mahomedan gentleman whom the Indian Government lately nominated as Prime Minister, but who appears not to have succeeded in winning her confidence. Her desire is to procure the restoration to power of her husband, Mahomed Seedeck. That, however, is impossible, in view of the misrule which marked his administration. It seems probable that some English officer will be deputed to bring the State into order.

The opium revenue in the financial year which has just closed was worse than the estimate by 6,01,910 rupees, the deficiency being chiefly on the Bombay side. The increased sale of Bengal opium is seriously affecting the Malwa drug. It has been decided that 55,000 chests shall be sold during the current financial year.

Owing to the great heat and want of rain during the last fortnight the tea and indigo prospects are not so favourable as could be wished. The cry, "Want of rain," comes from all districts, and it is probable that a considerable portion of the spring sowings of indigo will have to be resown. The hail has done some damage to the tea plants in Sylhet and Cachar, and the blight is reported to be unusually early in Darjeeling.

The Commander-in-Chief arrived at Peshawur on the 18th inst., and proceeded thence through the Khyber to Lund-i-Khotal. He returned to Peshawur on Wednesday and started next day for Simla.

Thebaw, the two Queens, and their suite have arrived at Ratnagiri, where two bungalows have been provided for the party. The accounts of Thebaw's arrival describe him as looking comparatively unconcerned.

The Rangoon newspapers lately published and some Indian journals reproduced a document purporting to be a memorandum by the Viceroy on Burmese affairs. As its gist may have been telegraphed to England it may be well to mention that it was not intended as a State paper but merely as a private aide-memoire for Mr. Bernard's personal guidance concerning certain matters which happened to be occupying Lord Dufferin's attention at the time.

MANDALAY, APRIL 26.

Some further incendiary fires have occurred in the walled city, but without serious results. Some dacoities have been committed in the town, and the population is much excited, anticipating an attack by the Myinzaing Prince. Great abuses exist in connection with the Burmese police force, and these account to a large extent for the unsatisfactory condition of Mandalay.

The military force in Upper Burma consists of four batteries of artillery, three and a-half regiments of British Infantry, one regiment of Madras Cavalry, four companies of Sappers, and eleven regiments of Native Infantry. Reinforcements consisting of a half battalion of British Infantry, two regiments of Bombay Native Infantry, and one battery of mountain guns are coming from India. On their arrival General White will have 12,000 men available. The garrison of the lower Province is being reinforced by a regiment of Native Infantry. The want of cavalry has been greatly felt in the recent operations.

As a large portion of the country is now being flooded for the rice crop, active operations in those districts must be suspended to a large extent for some months.

The general condition of the country is not improving; and the reports from the outlying districts are unsatisfactory. The Hlaythin Atwin Woon, the leading Burmese ex-Minister, has applied for and received permission to proceed to Calcutta, to reside there until the country is pacified.

The Bhamo mail has not arrived, and we have received no details of Captain Wace's repulse.

THERE are 230,000,000 cocoanut trees in the world, yielding 10,000,000,000 nuts every year!

THE Indus Valley State Railway is responsible for the largest number of fires in trains, fifteen out of the thirty-two having taken place on this wood-burning line. Eight passengers were killed, and twenty-four injured from causes other than accidents to trains, such as the crossing the line at stations, and falling out of carriages during the running of the trains. Twenty-six servants in the employ of railways or of contractors were killed and 114 injured, while performing duties connected directly with the transit of passengers and goods, from causes other than accidents to trains. Four persons were killed and two injured whilst passing over the line at level-crossings, forty-five were killed and fifteen injured by trespassing on the line, and eighteen committed suicide, and two were injured in attempting to commit suicide, and three were killed and three injured from miscellaneous causes. Besides the above, sixteen persons were killed and forty-six injured in railway yards, work-shops, &c., and seventy-two persons met their deaths in carriages and stations from causes unconnected with the working of trains.

THE Bombay Press takes a hopeful view of the declining rupee, judging from the following expression of opinion by the leading English organ of that Presidency:—"How much loss officials with fixed salaries in rupees have to suffer from the depreciation of the rupee is a matter not so easy to determine as is sometimes supposed. That they do suffer very severely was frankly admitted by the Viceroy and his Councillors, who lamented that they had to inflict an income-tax on salaries that had already suffered so severely by exchange. Every time we send £50 home, and have to pay Rs. 666 for the remittance, we seem to have a practical illustration of the fact, and an exact measure of the amount of loss sustained. Yet a consideration of some comforting facts and figures given in the Economist and Statist will show that the evil is at any rate not so great as is generally supposed, and that we certainly do not lose Rs. 166 whenever we pay Rs. 666 instead of Rs. 500 for £50. From the columns of these two financial newspapers we find clear evidence of the fact that the same causes which have depreciated silver as compared with gold have also led to a market fall in prices, so that each sovereign in England will now buy far more than it used to do in the days of two shilling rupees. This fall in prices is so great that, according to the Statist, an income of £445 will now go as far in England as an income of £500 went in 1870. As the real value of money is its general purchasing power, we ought to estimate our income not by the amount of gold into which they could be converted, but by our power of purchasing necessities and luxuries. Now it is generally admitted that the rupee in India has not depreciated in value. All the loss that we suffer from the changed relative value of the precious metals is sustained when we purchase imports from Europe or remit money home. An examination from the price lists issued by the European shops fifteen years ago will show that, in spite of the fall of the rupee, we do not really pay much more now for European goods purchased in India than we did in 1870. Some articles in the advertisements of that date are dearer, and others are cheaper than now, but on the average there is not much difference observable. Our loss in remittances home cannot indeed be denied, but it is satisfactory to learn on good authority that even this loss is at any rate diminished by the compensating action of the fall of prices in England. If we accept as substantially correct the estimate given by the Statist, which we have no reason to suspect of exaggeration, then we may conclude that whoever now remits home for the expenses of his family £445 enables them to live in the same comfort as a yearly remittance of £500 would have provided fifteen years ago. Therefore, in order to obtain as much of everything in England as was secured by an official who in 1870, when the rupee was nearly worth two shillings, remitted Rs. 5,000 yearly, we must remit not Rs. 6,666 but only Rs. 5,933, the equivalent of £445 at 1s. 6d. for the rupee. Looked at from this light, the loss, though still great, is not nearly so much as is usually supposed, and there is happily every reason to believe that, when prices in England have been still further adjusted to the present values of the precious metals, the purchasing power of English money in England will be still more increased, and the real loss by exchange as measured by the purchasing power of our rupees when converted into English sovereigns will be proportionately diminished."

HOME PRESS.

THE Times considers that the attempt to burn Mandalay is the most serious attack that has been made upon the new order since we undertook the government of the country; and it is significant that the reckless attempt of the insurgents and dacoits has been made, not upon the English troops or officials, but upon the Burmese themselves and their possessions. It is pretty evident that we cannot permit this mode of waging war. The enemy has murdered a harmless European, a military apothecary, Mr. Devine; and has burned down a large part of the capital. This demands very swift and stern measures of repression; the more so as the Burmese are somewhat different from the other Eastern races, and are not at all apt to yield unless it becomes plain to them that the adversary is very much stronger than they. It seems certain that we have too small a staff for the present critical state of affairs in Burma. Annexations are not made in a day, nor without an infinity of trouble and worry; and it is a serious blunder to attempt to carry on the new government of an annexed country without a force strong enough to put down revolt with promptitude.

THE troubles in Burma are, notes the Daily News, becoming a source of serious anxiety to the Indian Government. Near Bhamo a British force has been compelled to retreat, two officers and some of the men being wounded. A police-station six miles from Mandalay has been attacked by a large body of dacoits, who overcame the police, and massacred twenty-three out of forty in cold blood. At other points the insurgents are showing increased audacity; and the resistance to the new government is growing in strength and violence. The position of military matters is far from reassuring; though it is hoped that a sufficient force to ensure order is already on its way. The whole course of affairs since the annexation has been unsatisfactory. It seems to have been carried out without sufficient consideration, or at least without sufficient force. We have no doubt that in the long run the change from the tyranny of Theebaw to British rule will result in benefit to the Burmese people and in advantage to India, but up to the present time neither of these results has been obtained. The Indian Government is suffering from the anarchy which had existed previous to the annexation, and part of the difficulty which has now arisen is probably the inevitable accompaniment of an effort to reduce the country to order. It is not entirely patriotic resistance to an enemy, though it is not mere dacoity. The Burmese probably prefer to be tyrannised over by their own native King rather than to be justly and kindly ruled by a foreign Power. The Indian Government, however, must send sufficient force to Mandalay to pacify the country, and the cost and trouble will probably impose a considerable burden on the Indian people before the task is fully accomplished.

THE RUSSIANS IN CENTRAL ASIA.—The Novoe Vremya has published some very severe and unfavourable criticisms of General Tcherniaieff's opinions on the Transcaspien Railway. General Tcherniaieff condemns the whole scheme of General Annenkoff's railway, both from a strategical and military and a commercial standpoint. He naturally claims superiority for the more northern route, officially discovered by himself while reigning at Tashkend, which has more than once been described in the Times as running from the bay, re-christened after the Czarevitch, on the Caspian, to Kungrad, on the Amu Daria. He always advocated the laying of a railway over this line. The more southern one since adopted is too near the Persian frontier, from which it would in certain circumstances be in great danger, unless guarded by a strong force of troops, who could not be sufficiently supplied with water, although arrangements have already been made for laying waterpipes along the railway. The greater part of the line is to be built upon shifting sand; and for this reason he considers the construction of the section from Merv to Bokhara as practically impossible. The only way would be to construct side-walls all the distance to keep off the sand; but for this there are neither wood nor stone. Even the Bokharans in some places, he says, plant tall poplars round their settlements for this purpose, but are often compelled to decamp to fresh pastures, when only the tops of these trees are left visible. He then launches the extraordinary opinion that an army 200,000 strong sent against the Anglo-Indian frontier could not be got over the line in less than three years from the declaration of war. The ruinous burden which the line will lay upon the Government is then described, and a special commission is recommended to investigate the matter on the spot, and control the construction. General Tcherniaieff also shares the opinion of M. Venuikoff, that in the Afghan frontier dispute England succeeded in locking Russia in among sandy deserts, and keeping the fertile southern valley of the Murghab for herself. Russia, he furthermore thinks, may soon be in the same position in regard to Bokhara as she now finds herself in as respects Belgrade and Sofia. The absurdity of the comparison is pointed out by the Novoe Vremya, which says that on the appearance of Kutta Tiura, the pretender, calling for a Russian occupation of that Khanate, Russia would certainly meet with no difficulty. England would not dare to interfere, as she has unjustifiably done in every other Russian expedition in Central Asia. The General calls the railway an academical one, and the Novoe Vremya declares its opinion about it to be of a pessimistic and exaggerated character.

BENGAL.

BENGAL SILK.—Rightly or wrongly, Bengal silk has always had a bad name, but it would appear from the prices now ruling that it is in every way as good as Italian, if not superior. All that can be urged against Bengal silk is that, owing to a certain want of firmness in the cocoon, the result of reeling is not all that might, perhaps, be desired. The producer of the Indian cocoon is, in some important respects, like his brother, the cultivator of the soil. You may point out to the latter how he may grow the best wheat in the world, but unless you can prove to him that the result will place more rupees to his credit, your teaching will be utterly disregarded. But the moment you show him that it is to his personal profit to use improved seed or better methods, the cultivator is surprisingly ready to take advantage of any counsel. In the same way the rearer of cocoons has found from practical experience the quantity of mulberry leaf it pays him best to allow his worms to consume in order to give him a certain gain, and to this present day it has been found impossible to convince him that it would pay to rear cocoons of the Italian quality. When he once sees this he will change his traditional tactics, but not till then.—Englishman.

MADRAS.

LOOKING UP.—It is startling to find the £1 shares of the Mysore Gold Mining Company quoted in London at £8 15s., or at nearly nine times their original value, especially as, about three years ago, hardly anyone would look at them when offered at 2s. 6d. Yet the Conolly teak plantations at Nelambore, in the Malabar District, furnish a yet more remarkable example of what is known as "appreciation." They were commenced in 1840, and they now cover 3,435 acres. The expenditure by the Government thereon has been (including compound interest at 4 per cent per annum) about 10½ lakhs of rupees; and the receipts (also including interest) have been 7½ lakhs. So the Government is out of pocket about 2½ lakhs. In the year 1900, or fourteen years hence, the first regular felling of mature trees will commence; and it is computed by the experts of the Forest Department, that there will then be 15 millions of cubic feet of teak timber to be harvested, which, at minimum market prices, should realise 90 lakhs, or thirty-three times the capital invested. Mr. Conolly, the Collector of Malabar, to whose foresight and persistence the Government is mainly indebted for this magnificent property, was murdered by Moplahs at Calicut in 1865, a day or two after he had been informed of his appointment to Council. He left behind him a noble monument. Then the Government has something better than many a gold mine in its Cinchona Plantations on the Nilgiris. These estates, occupying an area of 850 acres, represent an outlay of £208,174 and the actual amount realised has been £199,260. So that virtually the Government has been recouped for its whole investment, and it now owns upwards of half a million of cinchona trees, of which a moiety are Officinalis and Succirabra. The Government is diligently increasing its plantations but this is misdirected energy, since it seriously checks private enterprise in the production of a most valuable commodity. The intervention of Government in the conservancy and extension of forests is essential in such a country as this, for private enterprise cannot wait for the growth of teak; but this cannot be alleged with regard to the cultivation of cinchona, coffee, tea, cotton, indigo, myrabolams, ground-nuts and other staples of commerce. Three or four years ago, the Government could have disposed of its cinchona, for a very large sum that a London syndicate was prepared to pay; but, at the present time, it would probably find it difficult to obtain an offer of half that amount.—Mail.

BOMBAY.

A CIVILIAN OF THE OLD SCHOOL.—The mail to-day takes from the Bombay Presidency a fine type of a species unfortunately fast becoming extinct—the old school of Indian Civilian. Mr. E. P. Robertson belongs to a family who had done much to introduce a civilized government into the wild Deccan, and he has continued the traditions of his race. Thirty-five years have lapsed since Mr. Robertson joined the service as assistant collector and magistrate of Surat. In 1868 he was appointed on special duty to Bombay to report on Abkari lands, and from thence was transferred to Dharwar as acting collector. As collector of Dharwar Mr. Robertson made his name as an able and energetic administrator. During his rule (in those days collectors had some power) roads were made, bridges built, schools opened, and Dharwar became known throughout the Presidency as a model collectorate. The collector was the squire of the district, and being a good agriculturist, did much to improve the cotton and other agricultural products of his domain. Deep was the regret among the cultivators, whose master and friend he had been, when Mr. Robertson left them to be Commissioner of the Central Division. Here, again, he showed the interest he took in the welfare of the ryot by strenuously resisting the policy that every farthing of the revenue should be gathered during the famine year. The Secretary of State upheld Mr. Robertson's view of the subject and large remissions were ordered to be made. Mr. Robertson proved himself as commissioner what he was as collector, a thoroughly practical administrator, who knew the wants and habits of the people. He knew their wants and habits, because as a keen sportsman and enthusiastic fisherman he came in contact with them. And those who know the natives best are those who like them most. By his departure to-day, the Government lose an honest and wise mentor, and the natives of this Presidency one who did not care to flatter them, but who devoted the best years of his life to promoting their welfare and happiness, and who fought strenuously that they should always be treated with equity and justice. He takes with him the best wishes of a large circle of friends who have enjoyed his old Indian hospitality and who owe to him innumerable acts of kindness.—Times of India.

OBITUARY.

COLONEL JOHN CHARLES CAMPBELL DAUNT, V.C., of the Bengal Staff Corps, who obtained the Victoria Cross for acts of heroism during the Indian Mutiny, died at Clifton last week, at the age of 53 years. He entered the Indian Army in 1852, and took part in the action with the mutineers of the Ramghur Battalion, at Chota Nagpore, on Oct. 2, 1857. The mutineers were, after a hard struggle, defeated, but not till they had killed or disabled one-third of our weak force, whom they mowed down with grape. Two of the enemy's guns caused great havoc in this way, and affairs looked critical, when, with Sergeant Denis Dynon, of the 53rd Regiment, Colonel (then Lieutenant) Daunt rushed forward, and, pistolling the artillerymen, silenced the guns. Again, on Nov. 2, at Nowadah, Behar, Daunt, with a few of Rattray's Sikhs, pursued a large body of mutineers of the 32nd Bengal Native Infantry into an enclosure, in driving them from which he was severely wounded, and the preservation of his party was mainly due to his gallantry. He was awarded the Victoria Cross, and subsequently served in the China campaign in 1858, being present at the affair with the braves of the White Cloud Mountains, at the repulse of the Chinese at the landing-pier, and at the Magazine Hill, receiving a medal for his services. The deeds of the heroes who rescued our Indian Empire from the grasp of the Bengal mutineers in 1857 bear repetition even after the lapse of a quarter of a century, and should nerve the hearts of the rising generation of soldiers to similar dauntless exploits in the preservation of the glorious heritage of empire bequeathed to them by their fathers.

MANDALAY.—The following candid remarks by a shrewd observer will be read with all the more interest because they were not intended to see the light. They are extracted from a private letter, dated Mandalay, 10th March:—"If love of travel or adventure ever suggests to you a visit to this place, resist the temptation. I got up here some weeks ago. The rail and river service between Rangoon and this place fitted in very well. We only stuck on a sand-bank once for a couple of hours. The boats are fairly comfortable. In our boat, however, one or two of the cabins were infested by ants, but the inmates had the alternative of sleeping on deck. The Viceroy's reception was very tame—a levée, a Native dance, and a great deal of dust. Lord Dufferin sat in a frock-coat and tall hat among a lot of genuine Native princesses, who were sprawling about in every conceivable attitude, clad in their Native costume—a silk cloth stretched tightly behind, and discovering liberally their natural charms in front. The heat is awful, 95° to 97° in the coolest part of our house. We live in great discomfort in a 'Pongey' building, made of wood with copper roofing. We have no books, and letters generally come so that we have two mails delivered at one and the same time. There is absolutely nothing to do. We sit smoking in a miserable veranda during six hours of the day. If I were offered the Chief Commissionership I would not accept it. Sanguine officials say the place will develop. Please Heaven, I may not be here to watch its progress. I shall go home as soon as I can. The country is very picturesque between Thayetmayo and Mandalay. I believe there are beautiful orchids to be got. (This might suit your friend Joe Chamberlain!) Now, however, all is burnt up. The heat is simply awful, but then we live in Native houses without punkas and other luxuries. There is a talk of starting punkas, but the Burmese Native is very idle, though an excellent workman. Loot there is none. There were weekly auction sales at the Palace, but they sold great rubbish. I am told—carried off everything he could, and that the—sent away boxes of loot the first week of occupation. The stations about, like Minhla, &c., are far worse than this, because the society is smaller. We never ride a yard without a revolver. This is by order, but it is scarcely necessary now. The health of the troops is excellent, although there were 180 cases of bad diarrhoea in the Palace."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE CAPTAIN'S YARNS.*

Captain Ray was one of the too numerous individuals who have served long and faithfully in the Royal Navy without attracting the notice of the higher authorities, and, consequently, without obtaining promotion commensurate with his services. These were of the most varied character, extending, indeed, to nearly every part of the world, while at home he had a long spell of coast-guard work, and was eventually appointed mail agent on board the vessels of the P. and O. Company. In all these capacities he met with many interesting adventures, and, in particular, was at Calcutta during the early days of the Indian Mutiny. It was certain that any observant man—and a sailor's life tends to bring out the faculty of observation—would have a great fund of narrative wherewith to enliven the society into which he might be cast, and wherewith to fill a very readable work to be called, say, "Fifty Years of a Tar's Life." But, like many excellent officers, both naval and military, Captain Ray had a mortal aversion to pens, ink, and paper, reaching, no doubt its maximum when those useful articles had to be applied to the making out of official returns, but never falling far short of 'boiling point'. Hence it comes about, that, excellent raconteur as he seems to have been, we get his "yarns" only, so to say, at secondhand, that is, as they were taken down by his neighbour and intimate friend, Mr. Menzies. Of this gentleman, who contents himself with the modest title of editor, it is but bare justice to say that he has exerted himself, and that most successfully, to minimise the disadvantages from which the freedom of his narrative might, in the circumstances, have greatly suffered. But for the candid avowal contained in the Preface, few would have "spotted" the fact that the story (throughout written in the first person) was not the production of Joseph Ray himself; and higher praise than this implies could scarcely be given.

It is obvious that the discursive style characteristic of a "yarn" renders it difficult to quote, within reasonable limits, even the more striking passages. But the subjoined story will bear repetition, and will convey, as well as any other, a good idea of the pleasant, chatty style, in which the entire book is written. The Chinese of Hong Kong had, it seems (chap. 27) set a price on the lives of the Europeans, assessing—so it was said—that of the admiral at five thousand dollars. "The English governor of Hong Kong was suspected to entertain a lofty opinion of his dignity and authority, and it devolved upon him principally to make an examination of the papers which were seized, and which contained evidence regarding the intended massacre of the Europeans. In one of these papers, which exhibited a list of the prices set on the heads of persons of different ranks in our little community, it was discovered that the name of the Governor did not appear at all. Whether this omission was due to accident or design was never made clear, but the fact of the omission proved very galling and humiliating to the pride of the Governor. Instead of finding a great price set upon his head, as he had hoped and expected, it was rumoured that he was mortified to a degree when it was found that nothing at all was offered for it by the authorities; as his rule and manners had been somewhat unpopular, many a laugh was enjoyed at his expense."

Anyone who can appreciate a good story well told, or who is possessed of a sense of the ludicrous and incongruous, will assuredly thank us for our recommendation to read this book.

SALAMMBO OF GUSTAVE FLAUBERT.†

Carthage, the mighty city which vied with Imperial Rome for the mastery of the world, was steeped in gaiety and pleasure. The Grand Council had given a great feast to celebrate the anniversary of the battle of Eryx. So the Mercenaries—better known, perhaps, under the term Barbarians—were assembled together—a seething, merciless, quarrelsome band, ever ready to shed blood and slay life—heated with wine, and inflamed with excitement, the ignoble warriors deadered their pleasures by recalling their troubles, and, as the debauch increased apace with each succeeding hour, crier, at first slight, but afterwards deafening, began to rend the skies that Carthage had not treated them justly in so far as they had not been granted the payments due to a soldiery which had fought their battles and hazarded their lives on behalf of the Republic. So an uproar arose. At this crisis a maiden of surpassing beauty and exquisite symmetry stepped into the midst of the scarce conscious band of desperadoes, and used her efforts to restrain the fury of the half-maddened hirelings. Her actions were watched with the utmost eagerness by a young Numidian chief. The Goddess of Love shot forth an arrow from the quiver, and Matho's heart was pierced with a desire to be possessed of Salammbô, the daughter of Hamilcar the Suffete.

"Carthage was powerful because she possessed in the sanctuary of Tanit a mysterious veil fallen from Heaven that conceals the Goddess." Such was the universal belief; so when the Barbarian army was massed together under the walls of the city, Matho and a faithful slave conceived the notion of surreptitiously entering the town and seizing the sacred emblem. The task was dangerous and well-nigh impossible; but the twofold force of love and hate—love for the maiden of Carthage, hate for the people who surrounded her—lent enthusiasm to the desperate enterprise, and ere the noon had run its course the sacrilegious pair found themselves in the Temple of Tanit. After ransacking all the palace they at length discovered the precious trophy; but a sudden madness now seized Matho, who deemed, as was the belief of the day, that the possessor of this mysterious emblem could defy all efforts of man. In this idea he determined that he would present himself before Salammbô and fall at her feet—a slave of love, a suppliant, and a husband. But the cries of the terrified maiden soon convinced him of the error of his ways, and the city being aroused he had to flee for his life, a fugitive, who, had it not been for the veneration which attached to the sacred veil, would soon have been torn to pieces by an infuriated mob; but none dare lay a finger upon a man in the protection of the Goddess of Carthage, and he escaped.

Thenceforth victory graced the arms of the coarse and burly Barbarians, who gathered round the doomed city, sweeping away all upon which they could lay their hands. It was as though a cloud of locusts had settled on the land; the towers of the Republic looked down upon a scene of desolation, destruction, and ruin. In their despair the citizens bethought themselves that they would entrust the safety of their persons to the custody of Hamilcar the Suffete, whom jealousy in high quarters had supplanted by men of inferior genius and less fertile expedients. But what could avail the efforts of man while the gods were aiding and helping the enemies of Carthage? So the High Priest of Tanit implored the noble Salammbô to recover the sacred trophy from the hands of its Numidian possessor. The enterprise was perilous in the extreme; it involved not only danger to life, but the risk of that dishonour which a noble-minded maiden could not contemplate without a shudder. A cry of anguish reached the heavens, but Fate was inexorable, and in the midst of the well-nigh superhuman efforts of a father to gain the mastery, his delicate and terrified daughter stepped forth and—how the reader must discover—gained that veil which her countrymen adored, and their enemies dreaded. The gods were appeased, lending their aid to the magnificent genius of Hamilcar; the barbarians were exterminated, Carthage was saved.

Such in outline is the tale which M. Sheldon has "Englished" from the French of M. Flaubert. That the work is remarkable can scarce be denied. The ghastliness of bloodshed and death, the gorgeous magnificence of scenery, the luxurious existence of the proud city, the superhuman efforts of man to hurl down destruction upon his fellow-creatures, are all depicted with a master's hand and a subtle pen. The work is a type of that word-painting school of fiction which finds so much favour amongst our brethren on the other side of the Channel. The translation, fine as it is, cannot possibly convey more than an idea of the grandeur of language and elegance of description which pervades the original text: these are the heritage of the country which possesses them—no foreigner can enter into the sacred precincts of the holy sanctuary of language. M. Sheldon has done well—more than well—but he is powerless to accomplish the impossible.

The work, however, is interesting as conveying an accurate idea of the inner life in a city which has played a conspicuous part in the annals of the world, when success in war depended more upon the individual prowess of the man than upon the weapons which inventive genius could place in his possession. Magnificent, noble, superb, luxurious, its escape from the hands of Barbarians, who would have despoiled its palaces and plundered its opulence, is a welcome conclusion to a welcome tale of love, war, hate, and destruction.

WITH METHUEN'S IRREGULAR HORSE IN BECHUANALAND.*

This is a simply told narrative of the pursuit of success under difficulties, and, to people who are accustomed to see nothing more characteristic of the realities of war than are visible in England, is most instructive reading. Methuen's Irregular Horse was a volunteer force; a complete omnium gatherum. "A were supposed to be gentlemen, B yeomen, artisans, and ex-non-coms. of cavalry and line regiments, C principally old soldiers and men of that stamp. There were ex-officers of the army and navy, clerks, artists, musicians, medical students, dentists, &c."

The corps, thus formed, was "an irregular force with irregular officers, had irregular orders issued, irregular drills, and no sort of system." The men were compelled by "superior order" to leave their great-coats and claks at the Cape, to be replaced by others at Government cost; for a long time they got none, and then articles perfectly useless. The rations were not, it would seem, always what they should have been, yet the corps acquitted itself splendidly in spite of all these drawbacks; everyone had confidence in their General, minor differences were sunk, and every one seems to have worked with a will. There can be no doubt that, had they been called on to encounter the enemy, they would have shown that a Volunteer Force could give a good account of the Boers, and it was only through Sir C. Warren's excellent strategy that they were denied the chance of doing so.

"One of the Force" has cause to congratulate himself, both on his share in the expedition, and on the clear, simple, and unpretentious way in which he has narrated its doings. His hints as to the equipment of similar expeditions are particularly valuable.

THE St. Petersburg correspondent of the Times reports under date April 14, that the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway has given a fresh incitement to the discussion among Russians of their own long-talked-of line to the Pacific across Siberia to Vladivostok. If Russia has stolen a march over England in railway progress towards Herat, it will be a long time before the Russian locomotives compete with those of England and America in reaching the shores of the Pacific. The branch to Tiumen has not yet been made, and the Ufa Zlatoust section to Ekaterinburg has only lately been decided upon, after years of dispute over the conflicting claims of different towns. Yet the almost chimerical idea of a Russian Pacific railroad is already talked of and written about as an undertaking of early and easy accomplishment. The other day a meeting of the Society for furthering Russian Trade and Commerce, under the presidency of Count Ignatieff, was enlightened on the subject by a discussion of several projects for the great work, among them being a curious one tendered by an enterprising exile living in Siberian banishment. All difficulties were very satisfactorily disposed of except one, which was quite left out of calculation, and that was the source of the 150,000,000 roubles and more that would be required for the enterprise. The addition of the Canadian Pacific Railway to that of the United States naturally makes the Russians feel more keenly than ever the disadvantages of their isolated position on the Amoor and the Pacific coast.

THE TRADE OF KARACHI.—The Sind Gazette in a leading article says:—"The whole future of Karachi appears to turn upon the use made of their opportunities by the mercantile community, upon its enterprise in point of fact. On the one hand, we see that the expansion of trade is outgrowing the facilities for it, on the other, that there is hardly to be found a more rapid mode, or a more boundless prospect of making money, than by the construction of the pre-eminently reproductive works of docks and wharves. If we take these two sets of circumstances together, we confess that it is with some astonishment that we learn that there is danger of the all-important expansion of the trade of this port being checked by want of capital to work out the necessary, nay, indispensable improvements, that the harbour work cannot be carried on without the assistance of Government by loans, and that private enterprise in Karachi cannot undertake one of the most lucrative businesses ever offered to investors. That money must be forthcoming before money can be made is obvious enough. But the same resources which have turned the fishing village of forty years ago into the Karachi port of to-day, are not surely less available now than they have been any year since Sind was annexed. Banks, we are told, will not advance money for such purposes as we are now contemplating, because the locking-up of the capital is incompatible with their special business. Merchants and shipowners will not lay out money in this way, because we are told they can make their profits fast enough in the handling of their cargoes in the present rough way, by means of lighters and Native boats, without wharves and quays. And so things go on from day to day. Government seems to be in no hurry. Their assistance is contingent on the formation of a Port Trust, the draft bill for which was, we are informed, before Council in October last, but which does not appear to have made progress since. In the meantime, there is not only the danger that the expansion of trade may be checked owing to the unfavourable opinion of the harbour entertained by the mercantile marine, but the certainty also that the capability of making the point a base for military operations on the frontier, will be seriously diminished by the lack of many harbour essentials. We should be loth to believe that with the assurance to both that expenditure here would be quickly repaid with interest, neither the Government nor private enterprise can hasten the development of this port. It is, of course, a question of money, but there is probably no kind of investment more profitable both to the State and to the private fortunes of investors than that in wharves and quays and harbour works generally; there is certainly nothing more likely to help expansion of trade than the removal of the causes of that grumbling on the part of the masters of vessels to which allusion has been made. What has been done already is surely only an encouragement to do more. From what we can see in the growth of trade under the drawbacks which have existed, we can deduce the certain consequences of the removal of those drawbacks.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA (LIMITED).—The ordinary general meeting of the shareholders of this company was held at the City Terminus Hotel last week, under the presidency of Mr. R. O. Campbell.—The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said he thought that all things considered the shareholders would be disposed to look at the results of the half-year's working as on the whole satisfactory. The year had been one unfavourable to banking operations in India, owing to the general stagnation of trade, and the continued fall in the value of silver as measured by gold. The standing price for silver used to be 49½d. per ounce, whereas it has now fallen to 46½d. per ounce. Different views with regard to the depreciation of this metal had recently attracted the attention of the financiers, and of one suggestion he approved, viz., bi-metalism. He was not without hopes that the Indian Government would turn their attention to the subject, for the present very unsatisfactory state of things no doubt seriously affected trade, and was one of the causes of the prevailing commercial depression. With regard to the balance-sheet, they would see that their earnings had been upwards of £83,000, but after deducting the necessary expenses and making the usual provision for doubtful debts, there remained a net profit of £38,247, to which had to be added the sum of £12,184, which had been brought forward. In the half year ending last June they had paid an interim dividend of 5 per cent., and had then carried forward £10,000 to the reserve; and it was now proposed to add a similar sum to the reserve, to make a further distribution at the rate of 5 per cent., and to carry forward to the next account £7,160. Looking to the business they had been doing this year, he had no doubt that they would be able to add considerably to the revenue. It would be evident to all that they had last year to work with a very narrow margin of profit, as money had been plentiful and it had been found difficult to find profitable employment for it. It had, therefore, been considered necessary for them to reduce the rate of interest on their deposit accounts. One very pleasing feature was that they had not made any bad debts during the year.—Mr. John Borradaile seconded the motion, which was carried.

ARCHDEACON CALEY, of Cottayam, who recently advertised a pony named "Theebaw"—a pony without vices—must be not a little surprised to find a whole string of Native papers grievously exercised in mind by his conduct. By naming the pony after his ex-Majesty of Burma, the "benighted Archdeacon" has, we are told, brutally outraged the memory of an unfortunate monarch, who, though "not exactly a Cæsar" because he had not Cæsar's failings, yet lived a kingly life, and made a "gentlemanly surrender."

A CALCUTTA paper notices the remarkable increase of imports of Pilsener beer, and predicts that if they do not take measures to suit the tastes of consumers Bass and Alsopp are likely before long to lose the Indian trade just as Hodgson has done before them. Half a century ago Hodgson's pale ale was about the only beer known in India. It was imported by thousands of hogsheads, and consumers in those days usually bottled for themselves. Madras bottled beer had a reputation far beyond its own Presidency even up till thirty years ago. About forty years ago Bass and Alsopp came into favour, and although Tennant, Aitken, and Coope, and other brewers occasionally found favour for a short time Bass and Alsopp were by far the largest importers. One never sees a bottle of Hodgson's pale ale now, and, unless they brew a lighter ale, and consult the taste of consumers more, perhaps Bass and Alsopp may be replaced entirely in the next generation by the lighter beers of Germany.

In the third quarter of last year, as compared with the corresponding quarter of the previous year, there was an increase of 60, or 9·27 per cent., in the number of accidents on the Indian railways. At the same time, however, there was an increase of 10·22 per cent. in the mean mileage worked, and 18·07 per cent. in the train mileage. The railways in which the number of accidents chiefly increased were the East Indian, which had an increase of 20, the Oudh and Rohilkund with 14, the Southern Mahratta with 10, the Bengal and South-Western with 27, the Indus Valley with 25, and Nulhutty with 10. On the other hand, there was a decrease of eighteen accidents on both the Darjiling and Eastern Bengal Railways. The total number of accidents of all sorts were 707, in which three passengers were injured; one native servant of the railway killed, and twelve injured, being a total for the three months of only one person killed and fifteen injured. The largest number of injured in any one accident was four, which occurred owing to a collision near Madupur on the East Indian Railway, between an up-passenger train and a brake-van, while the latter was being pushed by a pilot engine. There were fifteen cases of bursting of boilers, of tubes of engines, &c., of which eleven took place on the Indus Valley Railway, and of the fifty-three cases of failure of the machinery, sprains, &c., to the engines, the same railway is responsible for fifteen, and the Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway for thirty.

THE use of petroleum as fuel for engines in India is at last an accomplished fact. Mr. E. W. M. Hughes, Locomotive Superintendent of the Indus Valley Railway (now part of the North-Western Railway) has for a considerable time been making experiments with the oil raised in Biluchistan by Mr. K. A. Townsend, the petroleum expert; and the Lahore paper hears from Sukkur that on the 13th current one of the boilers in the workshops there was most successfully fired with liquid hydro-carbon, and has been working since with that fuel. The oil is found in considerable quantity now at a place called Kattan, in the Murree hills, about forty-five miles east of Sibi.

PRESENTATION TO SIR RICHARD GARTH—The members of the committee of the Calcutta Bar, headed by the Advocate-General, presented Sir Richard Garth, before leaving, with a very handsome silver vase, embossed and richly engraved, and standing on a small pedestal. In making the presentation the Advocate-General expressed the respect and esteem in which the Bar held Sir Richard Garth for his impartiality, his uniform courtesy, and his high qualities as a judge. He spoke of their regret at the causes which compelled him to retire from the Bench, and added that the Bar was glad to find that the Government had recognised the valuable services which the retiring Chief Justice had rendered by allowing him to retire on a full pension. The Advocate-General concluded by wishing his lordship, on his own behalf, and on behalf of the whole Bar, a pleasant voyage, and health and long life in England. His lordship thanked the Advocate-General and the members of the Bar for the very handsome present. He was leaving the country with very great regret, and could not express the feelings, even if he had the strength to do so, with which he was inspired by the kind words which had fallen from the Advocate-General—kind words which added very materially to the value of the gift which the members of the Bar had presented to him. The vase would be an heirloom to which great value would be attached. He then wished those present good-bye.

THE CAMP OF EXERCISE—The Pioneer says:—"People had to conceal their wives and daughters for fear of violation. The merchants had to bury their treasures for fear of the soldiers. The agriculturists whose crops have been destroyed have not yet been paid, nor has a valuation of these crops been yet arrived at." This is a description, not of an invasion, but—of the Delhi Camp of Exercise; and it is almost needless to say it appears in a vernacular newspaper published in Bengal. Such are the bonnes bouches which the Bengali journalists delight to serve up for his semi-ignorant clients, with a view perhaps to their ultimate quotation in the Voice of India for the benefit of Radical and Irish sympathisers in Parliament. The Army is thus maligned without any direct evidence being offered, or even suggested. It is a hopeless task to attempt to put such malicious writers on the right track; they prefer to take their own course, and if there are no stones to throw at the Government they will be flinging mud. "It is reported that the Burmese are avenging themselves on the English for ill-treatment of their women." This statement is made to emphasise the charges against our soldiers at Delhi, but where "it is reported," or by whom, remains of course unsaid. The malignancy of these charges is so apparent that the Army can afford to treat them with contempt; but those who make them are the men who are crying out because they are not to be allowed as Volunteers to stand shoulder to shoulder with the Regulars "for the defence of India!"

A CORRESPONDENT of the Times of India very sensibly asks:—Why do the people of India submit to the excessive foreign postage rates in vogue in this country? An Englishman at home can send a letter to San Francisco, Persia, Tahiti, or the Marquesas Islands for 2½d., whilst if he wishes to correspond with relatives in our own colonies or dependencies he is charged 5d. for letters to India, and 6d. for letters to Australia. The postage from India to the United Kingdom for a letter weighing half an ounce is 4½s., and for one to the Australian colonies 6s., which when the rupee is worth 2 shillings is equivalent to charges of 6½d. and 9d. respectively. Why there should be such a discrepancy in cost between sending a letter to San Francisco and to Bombay, two places nearly equi-distant from London, is not apparent. The amount of intercourse between India and England has so vastly increased that it is imperative that India should be admitted into the Postal Union, and that a cheaper system of postage should be inaugurated. It may be argued that we have a splendid service, and have to pay heavy subsidies for it to keep it efficient, but so have the Americans, and they pay very little if anything now in the shape of subsidies. The introduction of cheap postage would lead to an enormous increase in correspondence between India and the countries of Europe, which would soon cover any temporary loss that might be experienced at first from a reduction in the present rates. Cheap postage has proved such a splendid success in England, and in India also, as regards inland letters, that it seems a pity that a similar stride in the path of progress should be longer deferred in the case of letters to and from countries abroad.

THE BURMA ANNEXATION AND ITS CRITICS.

THE news that a horde of plunderers and dacoits attempted to set fire to the town of Mandalay, and that a detachment of Sepoys under British officers had to fall back upon Bhamo after an encounter with some insurgents has been seized upon by certain sensational mongerers of the English Press for the purpose of preaching a homily to their countrymen upon the folly and the wickedness of the act of annexation of Upper Burma. It was not likely that such an opportunity for the display of virtuous platitudes would be neglected by those amiable philanthropists who have been so aptly described as the friends of every country but their own. One of these declares, with all the veracity of type, that "we are beginning to reap rather early a small portion of the fruits of our wicked conquest of Upper Burma. "We hear of pillage, of conflagrations, and social disorder. How many harmless Burmese have we murdered and must murder" (in carrying out) "English aggression and English conquest and English crime?" The trifling fact that the conflagrations and consequent disorder are the doings of lawless ruffians, who have been the scourge of Upper Burma for years, is not taken into account, but the reader is left to draw the inference that this state of things has been brought about solely by British interference. The wicked attempt to burn down Mandalay by a gang of robbers, who were wholly bent on plunder, is painted as a patriotic attempt to get rid of the hated English—just as on a grander scale the Russians succeeded in getting rid of their French enemies at Moscow. The telegram giving a brief notice of the temporary falling back of the Sepoy detachment has been magnified into a "defeat" of, and a "disaster" to, the British troops, and has served its commercial purpose as a sensational heading to a newspaper handbill. But the explanation is ignored that the detachment which was sent to protect peaceful villages from a predatory raid has driven back the raiders and carried successfully two stockades, returning to Bhamo because it was prudent, owing to the difficulties of the jungle, not to push an advance further. This ignoring or distorting of facts has become of late a rather unpleasant feature in certain quarters of home journalism. It may have its uses for party purposes, and on the principle that "all is fair in love or war," it may be argued that "all is fair" in political strife also. There are some people, perhaps, to whom such a code of political ethics presents nothing detracting nor dishonourable. They will say that it has ever been the custom of the "Ins" to misrepresent the actions and motives of the "Outs," and of the "Outs" to deal in the same amiable way with the aims and actions of the "Ins." Party political warfare, it has been urged, can only be carried on successfully by hitting opponents hard, the object being to get "place." That obtained, much that was said or written in the heat of the struggle can be explained away in a Pickwickian sense. This is not a very attractive code of honour to sensitive minds, but feelings are not always supposed to be considered on such an occasion. Allowing, however, which we do not, that such misrepresentation for party purposes, does little or no harm in English political life, it cannot be said that it may not be of evil influence when it is reproduced in India. The Native Press there is yet unable to appreciate, or make the best use of the freedom which it enjoys under the liberty-loving rule of England, and it is too ready to believe that when Englishmen write against their own countrymen or Government, what they write must be true. It is not, therefore, surprising to read in the vernacular papers that "it is unjust to call the peaceful people of Burma dacoits and rebels; they have a better right to be styled patriots." The British Government does not look upon the Burmese as dacoits and rebels, but it refuses to recognise in the dacoits the "peaceful" people of Burma. This is a distinction which the Native journalist does not trouble himself about, but his English confrère, who can understand it if he likes, prefers to interpret Native opinion as being "unanimously hostile to the annexation," and we are told that according to this opinion "the policy that has necessitated the course has been reservedly condemned as unjustifiable." The same sort of assurance was announced about the annexation of the Punjab and of Oudh; all kind of warning and admonition was then given; all manner of evil results prognosticated. Yet to-day the Punjab and Oudh are enjoying not only peace but prosperity, and expressing gratitude for the benefits of British rule. The annexation of Upper Burma has been brought about by no desire for increase of territory—by no temptings of political ambition, but by the courage of England in stepping forward to rescue suffering millions from a savage and grinding tyranny. Temporary disorder was to be expected; but the change of administration has been carried out with merciful consideration for all interests. Disloyal critics may fume and fret in English newspapers at home; but the people of Burma will ere long accept with thankfulness the inauguration of British rule.

Since the above was written an evening contemporary improves upon the latest telegrams from Mandalay by pointing out that the English "invaders" are in front of a danger which they did not calculate upon, but which is a more formidable one than the raiding of dacoits or the opposition which may be offered by the Burmese hillmen. "The invading Power will have to reckon with the hidden opposition of China." We are reminded that "China claims to be the Suzerain of Burma." Very likely, but the Emperor of China claims also to be lord of the sun and moon and the fixed stars, but the solar system continues to go its own way notwithstanding. That "the Chinese are not easy people to negotiate with when they are expected to surrender territory they hold to be theirs" may be a truism also, but it is equally true that the Chinese prefer trading to fighting for territory, and that they are sufficiently alive to their own interests to see in the annexation of Upper Burma by the English, an opening which has hitherto been denied them for trade and commerce of a most extensive and profitable kind.

The advice which the Cassandras of the English Press now tender—viz., that the British Government should have accepted assurances from the French Government that French interference in our commercial relations with Burma was never intended, and from King Thebaw's heir that he would govern well, may be dismissed as ludicrous even if it did not come too late. We have annexed Upper Burma and must now bring it into orderly and quiet administration. The task may not be without its difficulties, but they are not insuperable. British energy, determination and patience have overcome greater ones, and will overcome these.

THE INDIAN AND COLONIAL EXHIBITION.

On Wednesday last a large body of representatives of the Home, Colonial and Indian Press were invited, by desire of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, to inspect the works in progress at South Kensington previous to the opening of the Exhibition by Her Majesty on the 4th of May. Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen, acting on behalf of his Royal Highness, took the party over the entire building, explaining to them the various Courts, &c., and pointing out the objects of special interest to which the attention of visitors would be most probably attracted. The display which will be made by the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, by Canada, the West Indies, and from other English dependencies, will be superb in its richness and variety, but the "Indian exhibits" will be a surprise and gratification to every one who takes an interest in that great Empire, of which so much has been written and spoken, but of which so little has been understood or cared for by Englishmen. For the boast which can now be made is not that India is sending for the gaze of her conquerors proofs only of her wealth in "barbaric pearl and gold," but proofs also of the commercial and industrial progress which she has made, and is making, under British rule. To those carping critics who would call in question the wisdom and beneficence of that rule, the reply will be found in the wonderful collection of works of Indian art and manufacture which will meet the eyes of all upon the opening day of the Exhibition. These are the trophies of peace which tell of the advantages of a rule which aims at developing the resources of the country and the energies of the people in the pleasant paths of commerce and trade. The several Presidencies and Provinces of India have vied with each other in making their separate exhibits as complete as possible, and the Native Princes and Chiefs have ably and liberally assisted the efforts of the English officials to this end. The magnificent "Jungle Trophy," which was unveiled for the first time on Wednesday, is a scenic triumph, the cost of which has been defrayed by the Maharajah of Kooch Behar. But what will most attract the thoughtful visitor will not be this, nor the Indian Palace, nor Durbar Hall with the wonderful carvings in wood and stone, and all the strange Oriental devices and decorations. Whilst giving due attention to these, and awarding a proper meed of praise to Mr. Purdon Clarke for his successful labour in bringing into shape and harmony so many diffuse and difficult materials to deal with, such visitor will find, perhaps, greater scope for reflection and wonderment when he comes to the Court in which are displayed the various economic products of India, which have been carefully arranged and classified by Dr. Watt, whose great scientific attainments are a guarantee for the excellence and thoroughness of the difficult work which he has undertaken and will continue to have charge of. This collection, from every "corner" of India, will give an idea of the wonderful resources of that country, and to help to that knowledge Dr. Watt has prepared an excellent epitome of his "Dictionary of the Economic Products of India."

The main gallery of the Exhibition, which extends 200 yards from the Entrance Hall, has been set apart for the productions of India. Here the visitor will linger surrounded by the choicest specimens of Oriental workmanship. The walls are covered with carpets, rugs, and trophies. An Indian Palace is rising on the site formerly occupied by the Prince of Wales's Pavilion. Near by is a magnificently carved gateway from Gwalior, a present to the Kensington Museum from the Maharajah Sindhia. This gateway, which came over in 2,000 pieces, is a marvel of lightness and elegance. There is a temple, too, models of famous arches, a bridge of bamboo canes, and an immense jungle, a wonderful imitation of the real thing. Splendid specimens of wood-carving are to be seen on every side, but probably the contents of the cases will be the most attractive. In one there are exquisite specimens of ivory carving from a full sized palanquin to a lady's comb; in another silver filigree work from Cuttack identical in character with that of ancient Greece and of Malta at the present day; in a third the goldsmith's work of Kashmir, distinguished by the ruddy colour of the gold used. Valuable shawls; muslins embroidered with silk and gold thread at Decca, Patna, and Delhi; leather work from Gujerat; velvet, gorgeously embroidered with gold from the capitals of the Deccan; the hammered repoussé work of Cutch; swords, marvellously watered, and sometimes sculptured in half relief, with hunting scenes; firearms, damascened in gold, and covered with precious stones; brass and copper vessels of all sizes and descriptions; Bidari work, or the damascening of silver upon bronze; jewelled shawls; magnificent and wondrously-fashioned slippers, bracelets, bangles, armlets of all sizes and colours; brass work from Bengal and glass from Patna—all that can delight the eye and please the most fastidious taste.

Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen was indefatigable in his exertions to give the members of the Press every information concerning the great work of which he is the managerial head. After luncheon he traced in an exhaustive speech the history of the Exhibition from the time—some three years ago—when the Prince of Wales conceived the idea of instituting it down to the present moment. He stated that he felt sure that the public would soon endorse his opinion that the "Indian and Colonial Exhibition" would be the most magnificent and interesting one which had ever been seen, and that it would serve the high and noble purpose of binding closer together England and India and her Colonies throughout the world.

The programme for the opening ceremony, May 4, has been definitely arranged. Her Majesty will inaugurate the Exhibition in what is called semi-state, but this will permit of a Royal pageant more brilliant than any seen in London since the death of the Prince Consort. The Queen, accompanied by all the members of the Royal Family now in England, will arrive at twelve o'clock precisely at the main entrance in the Exhibition-road. Her Majesty will be attended by the Lords and Ladies in Waiting, and by the heralds, trumpeters, and beefeaters. In the vestibule Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen and the ninety-three Royal and Colonial Commissioners, in levée dress, will await Her Majesty. A procession being formed, the Queen will pass down the Indian Section, between "Old London" and the Indian Palace, thence under a covered pathway, across "Canada," the Horticultural Gardens, the conservatory, into the Albert Hall. Here she will take her station on a superb Eastern throne brought expressly from India. The Archbishop of Canterbury will pronounce the blessing. Mme. Albani, a Canadian by birth, will very appropriately sing, "Home, Sweet Home." An ode by the Poet Laureate will next be sung, the music being expressly composed by Sir Arthur Sullivan. Her Majesty will now declare the Exhibition open, and finally Mme. Albani will sing the solos of "God Save the Queen." The Queen will return by the same way she arrived. A number of Indian potentates, with their attendants, will witness the procession from the courtyard of the Indian Palace.

THE INDIAN POST OFFICE.—The annual report of the operations of the Indian Post Office for the year 1884-5 has recently been received from that country. It shows that the working and progress of the Post Office were very satisfactory. The total number of articles conveyed had risen from 200 millions in the previous year to 217 millions. Paid letters had increased by 4.34 per cent., and unpaid letters had decreased by 3 per cent., showing that the provisions of the service were becoming better understood. Registered letters had increased by 7.56 per cent., newspapers by 10 per cent., parcels by 4 per cent., packets by 19.89 per cent., and postcards by 26 per cent. The number of post-offices increased by 609, or from 5,879 to 6,488. Many of these are not under the charge of Post Office officials. No fewer than 1,370 schoolmasters are also village postmasters. Letter-boxes also increased from 8,426 to 8,731, and village postmen from 3,843 to 4,029. The value of stamps sold to the general public was 5½ million rupees. There was a remarkable development in the work done by the Post Office Savings Bank. Three hundred new banks were opened, and the balance rose from 75 to 134½ lakhs, or from three-quarters of a million sterling to one million and a quarter. To give further simplicity to the operations of this department the old district savings banks were amalgamated with it from the 1st of the present month. Money orders have also come into greater use, and in one district of the North-West Provinces an experiment was successfully made to remit land revenue in this manner. Postal orders had not become popular, but in every other branch the confidence of the natives and their eagerness to avail themselves of its advantages matched the energy of the department. Among other statistics we learn there were 26 mail robberies, half in British, half in native territory; there were 244 cases of various offences by postal officials; and the number of public complaints was 6,511, of which 2,835 were found to be groundless.

IN 1819 George Drummond, a lad of sixteen summers, landed in India and proceeded to Arrah, where he has just died. During the whole of this lengthened period of nearly seventy years he never again saw the sea; a steamer he not once in his life beheld, while he knew by personal experience nought of the locomotive than that in 1862 a line was opened from Bunar to Arrah. Withal this strange notability may, perhaps, have derived more real enjoyment from daily existence than most of his contemporaries who pushed and elbowed through life, always eager, excited, and not infrequently disappointed.

THE Indian ryot has recently become, says a correspondent, the most influential corn producer in the world. He rules the market at Mark-lane, and through it the leading Corn Exchanges of Europe. We may be certain that the American farmer will do everything he possibly can to oust him from this potential position, and it behoves the ryot to take advantage of every turn likely to secure to him and enable him to maintain his point of advantage. He must not simply hold his own, but must compete with the American food producer in every crop that is raised in the two countries alike. With regard to maize or Indian corn the prairie farmer has matters all his own way. This state of things should be allowed to continue no longer, and the sooner the extensive cultivation of such a valuable and prolific corn as maize is commenced the better it will be for India. It is a plant that thrives in this country, and with very little encouragement from the Government, and those who direct the operations of the ryot, the crop might soon become one of our most valuable articles of export.

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR ROGER LETHBRIDGE, C.I.E. (Formerly Press Commissioner in India, &c.),

AND

ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E.,

H.M. INDIAN (HOME) SERVICE.

(Translator of the Anvár-i-Suhailf, &c.)

WHEN Thornton's "Gazetteer of India" was originally presented to the public, it was the only compilation of its kind, and it was obviously desirable that, within reasonable limits, the work should be sufficiently comprehensive to give the reader some insight into the history of the various localities enumerated. Since that date, however, Hunter's "Imperial Gazetteer" has been prepared, which is not only much more ample than its predecessor, but is still to be greatly enlarged in the New Edition now in course of production. In these circumstances it has been thought incumbent, when issuing a New Edition of Thornton's "Gazetteer" corrected up to date, to modify in some measure the plan of the work by omitting much of the detail, and giving only such leading facts and figures as will suffice for ordinary purposes of reference, a plan which has the additional advantage of reducing the work to one moderate-sized volume.

It is obvious that the value of the New Edition must depend in a large measure upon the care and judgment which have been exercised in the preparation of the letter-press. The task was, in the first instance, undertaken by Sir Roger Lethbridge, whose literary attainments and acquaintance with India were considered to qualify him to a marked degree for an undertaking demanding considerable knowledge and experience. In order, further, to render the work as complete and perfect as is possible, the Publishers deemed it prudent to subject the pages to the scrutiny of a second Editor, in the person of Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, whose lengthened experience gives to his criticism an unusual degree of weight and importance. The joint names which appear on the title-page will, it is hoped, serve as a guarantee to the public that the "Gazetteer" is in the main accurate and trustworthy, free alike from sins of omission and commission. It will be found to contain many hundreds of places not included in any former edition, while the areas and populations have been revised by the data given in the Census Report of 1881.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb,
and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to
Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals
throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public
are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially designed to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites,

the Technical and Theological Terms,
of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D., M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary
of the Church Missionary Society,
Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Muhammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary World.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr.
Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopædia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammadan
religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism
as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . . We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Muslim faith, the information being in every case
taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources,
with the comments of the best European scholars. . . .
This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Homescard Mail.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1875, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.
ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 3, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 16th April; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 14th April.

THE Boundary Commission is expected to return shortly. A part comes through Kabul, and a part by the north through Cashmere.

COLONEL LOCKHART's party, from Gilgit, probably meets the Commission somewhere near the new frontier.

THERE appears to be little, if any, improvement in the state of some of the frontier districts of Lower Burma.

THE Court appointed to collect evidence regarding the "Mandalay scandals" has completed its work.

COLONEL HOOPER, the Provost Marshal, is said to have admitted, in regard to the allegation of extortion of evidence, that he had taken an unusual course, though he believed that under the circumstances it was for the public interest.

AS regards the photographing of prisoners during the process of execution, he denied that there had been any unnecessary delay.

MR. MOYLAN, the Times' correspondent, admitted the hearsay nature of the data on which he framed his telegram.

MR. BERNARD said he did not believe Mr. Moylan had a personal animus against Colonel Hooper. But it was his distinct impression that Mr. Moylan had brought every charge he could against the military authorities on account of the way in which he had been made to leave Mandalay by General Prendergast's orders.

THE general tendency of the home papers to give importance to the Chinese claims to Bhamo is causing surprise in Mandalay.

THE Viceroy and party have arrived at Simla.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS has completed his inspection of the North-Western frontier and has left Quetta en route for Kurrachee.

THE Shiranis, the tribe inhabiting the hills on the Dera Ismail Khan border, are again under blockade.

THE troopship Jumna arrived in Bombay from Portsmouth on the 11th April. There were two deaths during the voyage.

IT is stated that considerable changes will shortly be carried out in the composition of the Maharajah Scindia's army.

THE ex-King Thebaw, the Queen-Mother and two Queens have left Madras for Rutnagherry, which the Government has fixed upon as their future home.

IT has been finally settled that Sir Oliver St. John is to act as Agent to the Governor-General in Beluchistan, during Sir Robert Sandeman's absence on nineteen months' furlough.

MR. LEE-WARNER has been summoned to Mahabeshwar, to consult with the Government regarding the nomination of a successor to the late Regent of Kolhapore.

THE Punjab Government is sparing no pains to discover the real culprits in the recent examination frauds; and a large reward has been offered for information leading to the conviction of the offenders.

THE Bank of Bombay on Wednesday reduced its minimum rate of interest to six per cent.

MR. DINSHAW MANECKJEE PETIT, a wealthy Bombay Parsee, has contributed Rs. 10,000 to the building fund of a fire-temple at Madras.

THE Sir Munguldas Nathoobhoy case is being still heard in the Bombay High Court. The question of the right of a younger son to claim partition of ancestral Hindoo property is involved.

MR. H. BALDWIN, a well-known Colombo merchant, has met with a fatal carriage accident.

LADY DUFFERIN has taken to amateur photography. At Ramnagar the other day she photographed a group of dancing girls.

THE Government of India has sanctioned a loan of twenty-four and a-half lakhs for the development of the harbour works at Karachi.

IN reply to representation by the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, the Government of India has written that they are in entire accord with the Chamber as to the importance of the Nagpore-Bengal Railway.

H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES has appointed H.H. the Thakoresaheb Sir Takhatsingji, of Bhownugger, as one of the Royal Commissioners for the forthcoming London exhibition. The Thakore Saheb has consequently deputed Mr. M. M. Bhownugree to appear on his behalf as Commissioner. The latter gentleman left for England by the last mail steamer.

THE Tibetans have again stopped trade on the Indian frontier. Some rumour, it appears got afloat in that country that a force was preparing to advance into Tibet from Darjeeling, arising, probably, from Mr. Macaulay's whispered mission to Lhasa, and they took the alarm, closed the passes, and strengthened the guards on the frontier. An emissary has, however, been sent to Darjeeling to spy out what the Government of India is doing, and as he has gone back, and, it is presumed, has told them that it is innocent of any filibustering idea, it is hoped that the route will be made free again.

THE Provincial Bank of India, Limited, has stopped payment. The bank is a small affair, with a capital of five lakhs (half paid up), and was started at Delhi in June, 1884.

MR. W. D. CRUICKSHANK has been appointed to act as Secretary and Treasurer of the Bank of Bengal during Mr. Hardie's absence on the Finance Committee.

AN extensive postal robbery occurred in Calcutta on the 5th instant. A mail bag containing registered letters, the contents of which are valued at Rs. 1,00,000, was plundered between the Burra Bazaar Post Office and the General Post Office. Rs. 30,000 in notes and hundies were recovered, having been found scattered about on the Maidan. A number of postal employes have been arrested, one of whom has made a full confession.

A TERRIBLE case of running amok has occurred at Nasirabad in Rajputana. A Native constable and his brother killed three persons and wounded eleven more before they were shot down.

THE "Garstin case" has assumed wide dimensions. Four gentlemen of high and responsible office under Government have been cited as witnesses on behalf of the Zemindar who is implicated in the dacoity committed on Mr. Garstin.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL F. SPRING, Deputy Inspector-General of Ordnance, has been appointed Inspector-General of Bombay; Colonel C. Cowie, Royal Artillery, Deputy Inspector-General of Ordnance, Bengal, and Lieutenant-Colonel F. Mortimer has again been appointed to the Ordnance Department, and placed in charge of Fort William Arsenal.

Notes of the Week.

THE proverbial difficulty of having to make bricks without straw must be often felt by the gentleman who acts as the Times' correspondent in Calcutta, and who every Sunday has to telegraph to that journal a summary of Indian news. He does his best to make his intelligence sensational, and so he lends an importance to certain events which have in themselves no claim to distinction. A crowd of Natives, of no position or intelligence, comprising a few ryots, many mehters, and much of the scum of the bazaars, assemble to hear certain Babus, who have a veneer of English education, on the solid foundation of their own vanity, talk about British policy in the East, and this circumstance is wired to England as a great mass meeting of the people of India to protest against the errors of our administration. Englishmen in India reading such intelligence only laugh, but Englishmen at home are apt to be misled by it into acts or words casting discredit upon the Government which is working so hard in the true interests of the millions who are in no way represented by Young Bengal spouting sedition in English garments.

THE latest sensation wired is that a National League has been formed at Calcutta to demand that India should receive a measure of self-government similar to that enjoyed by the Australian and Canadian Colonies. The Times' correspondent thinks it "a significant fact" that many Native journals endeavour to find an analogy between the cases of Ireland and India. "They express warm sympathy with the Home Rule party, and watch with keen interest the struggle now proceeding at Westminster." Now, the sender of this telegram knows, or ought to know, that the papers he refers to are utterly devoid of influence, and are not read by one in a thousand of those they pretend to address. The Government of India wisely allows a certain latitude to Native auditors to give vent to their ingratitude to that English rule to which they owe their position and liberty of speech. It pleases them and does no harm to the paramount power; but it is hardly correct for an English correspondent to telegraph to the journal he is commissioned by that these ravings are the honest opinions of the masses of India.

THERE is, however, one item of consolation for those who are anxious as to the stability of our rule in the East. There has been "a marked absence of the Mahomedan element from recent political conferences and mass meetings." Not a single Mahomedan of note has joined the "National League." Indeed, the leading organ of Mahomedan opinion denies the right of the League to describe itself as national, "seeing that there is an absence of harmony and unity among the various races of India." The Bengali gentlemen who aspire to Home Rule ought to recognise the significance of this. How would they like to be left to settle the future of India with their Mussulmen friends, English protection being withdrawn? Macaulay wrote of the earlier struggles of the East India Company in Bengal that a war between Englishmen and Bengalis was a war between wolves and sheep; what simile would serve to describe a contest between Bengalis and Mahomedans?

THE question of Indian Expenditure continues to be a vexed one, but the cry is now not altogether against the cost of military administration whilst ignoring that of the civil. Some very sweeping reductions are suggested by the Anglo-Indian Press. "Large savings," says the Civil and Military Gazette, "can be effected only by dealing with large subjects, and the first that should be attacked is the subject of the Council of the Government of India and of the Presidencies of Madras and Bombay." The question of the Secretariats of the Supreme Government is alas recommended for consideration, and as a further sweeping saving it is suggested that the Geological and Archaeological Surveys should cease to exist and the great series of triangulations undertaken by the Survey Department be abandoned. And last, but not least, the pertinent (it will be called by the Native Press impertinent) query is put—"Why should Natives entering the service of Government in future not be required to contribute in part towards their pensions as is now done by members of the Covenanted Civil Service?"

BUT, as the journal which puts forward these recommendations declares—whatever is done in the matter of reduction of expenditure ought to be done once and for all on broad and comprehensive grounds. The minds of officers of Government should not be unsettled and the efficiency of their work prejudiced by constant changes and haphazard experiments in the attempts to economise and reform.

THE unfortunate artisans, writes a Bombay paper, who were induced to proceed to England to form an "Indian village" for the amusement of English sightseers, have returned in a sorry plight, regretting, we have no doubt, ever having left their "coral strand." Forty-two of them arrived in Bombay in the mail-steamer Assam. These include two Native Christians, two Parsees, fifteen Mahomedans, and twenty-three Hindoos, all of whom were engaged in September last to be exhibited at the Albert Palace at Battersea. The story of their treatment, and of their appearance before a London magistrate for relief, has already been published in the newspapers. On their arrival they were placed, by order of Government, under the special protection of a European police officer, who was directed to see them safely restored to their respective homes.

INDIAN, CEYLON, AND JAVA TEA.—The following is from the Circular of Messrs. George White and Co.:—During the past month 38,763 packages of Indian, 5,022 of Ceylon, and 6,496 of Java have been printed on importer's account. This will bring the quantity of Indian tea sold for the season to about fifty-nine millions, leaving about seven millions (say 75,000 packages) to be disposed of between this and August, when new teas are beginning to arrive more freely. Ceylon: The demand is limited to the few desirable invoices which have met with good competition; inferior lots, on the other hand, are depressed and difficult of sale except at low quotations. Java: There has been a rather large selection on offer, including some useful teas, which have attracted considerable attention both from the home and export trade. Sou-chongs at from 8d. to 9d. are evidently being bought to take the place of China congous, which are now scarce at similar prices, whilst the high rates paid for tippy pekoes at from 1s. 5½d. to 1s. 7½d. show that they are much appreciated. Advices from Calcutta by letter, dated 6th ult., state that the actual shipments from that port to Great Britain for the season were sixty-five and three-quarter millions, including half a million lost by shipwreck.

FRUIT FROM AUSTRALIA.—An interesting examination took place last week on board the Orient liner John Elder, which has just arrived in the Albert Docks, of a large consignment of fruit from South Australia, sent over to the commissioner for that colony, Sir Samuel Davenport, for show and sale in the colonial market to be held as part of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition. This being the first consignment of the kind from Australia, much interest attaches to the experiment, and considerable anxiety was felt as to the condition of the fruit after the long passage from the Antipodes. A number of the boxes were opened, and in each instance the fruit was found to be of first-rate quality and flavour, and in excellent order. It was not frozen, but was packed in cork-dust or sawdust, and placed in a cold chamber fitted with insulators, and kept as nearly as possible at a uniform temperature of 40°. Previous to the shipment, Sir Arthur Blyth, the agent-general for the colony, had sent out full directions as to the method of packing continental fruit coming into this country, and the result has proved eminently satisfactory. The fruit consists of various kinds of apples, pears, and grapes, while the rest of the consignment is made up of quinces, oranges, lemons, water and sweet melons, pomegranates, filberts, almonds, currants, raisins, and other dried fruits. It is intended to bring over from Australia during the exhibition a succession of shipments of a similar character, the object of the colonial governments being to establish a regular fruit importation into this country along with the meat trade. As the fruit harvest in Australia commences when ours terminates, it is hoped that, should the experiment to be tried on a large scale during the exhibition result satisfactorily, we shall in future have in this country a constant supply of fruit of all kinds in our home markets all the year round.—Iron.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondents.)

APRIL 27.

Myinnmoo, on the Irrawaddy, 30 miles south of Mandalay, was attacked yesterday by the insurgents, who were beaten off after half an hour's sharp fighting. Captain Badgley, R.E., commanding the detachment, and three Sepoys, were wounded.

At Monato, near Myingyan, the followers of the Kermmendine Prince, numbering 200 mounted men and 1,000 on foot, were defeated on the 21st inst. by a small force of cavalry under Captain Dundas, of the King's (Liverpool Regiment), who had marched up from Meytala. The enemy fled, losing 12 men killed and a number of wounded.

The insurgents are in considerable strength between Ava and Kyouksai, and menace the outskirts of Mandalay. Owing to the disturbed condition of the country, the proposed expedition to the ruby mines has been temporarily abandoned.

The Chindwin force is making satisfactory progress.

We have received the subjoined from the India Office :—

From Viceroy, dated April 27, 1886.

Following from Bernard, dated Mandalay, 26th :—

"Sorry to report cholera attacked 43rd Regiment on voyage up river. Fourteen deaths, including three followers. Steamer halted; troops put on shore at Yenangyoung. All precautions being taken, healthy being separated from sick, and marched up stream a short way.

"Affairs quiet at Mandalay, but country in central districts still much infested by rebels."

From Viceroy (Simla), April 28, 1886.

"Lieutenant William Greenlaw Forbes, 2nd Battalion, South Staffordshire Regiment, Probationer 11th Bengal Native Infantry, was shot through the heart near Hlinedet on April 21."

APRIL 29.

The walled city was fired at five o'clock this morning. The conflagration lasted until nine o'clock, a tract of nearly a mile in length by 500 yards wide being destroyed. The flames almost reached the prison, which was with difficulty saved. The 200 prisoners were hastily removed, under a strong guard, into the interior courts of the palace. All the available troops in garrison, commanded by General White in person, turned out to check the fire. This is the most destructive fire which has yet occurred.

There was a successful affair yesterday at Tadinshé village, twelve miles south of Mandalay. A body of cavalry surrounded it, capturing seventy-two insurgents and killing six who resisted. This breaks up a rebel band which had caused much trouble. Mr. Scott (the well-known writer on Burma) accompanied the force as Civil officer.

There have been thirty-three deaths from cholera among the Assam Light Infantry at Yenangyoung, and thirty-eight cases are still in hospital.

SIMLA, May 1.

All property captured during the late Burmese war is to be sold, the proceeds being applied towards defraying the expenses of the campaign.

CALCUTTA, May 2.

The Native Press continues to devote a large portion of space to political agitation, and especially to describing the rise and progress of an association lately formed in Calcutta under the ambitious title of the National League. The prospectus of the league is a long and somewhat vague document. It abounds in expressions of loyalty to the British Crown and of the intention of the founders to gain their ends by strictly constitutional methods. What the aims are for which they invite widespread co-operation and ample funds is not quite clear; but as far as can be gathered the chief of them would appear to be the establishment of representative institutions in India. The principal organ of the league is more outspoken. It demands that India should receive a measure of self-government similar to that enjoyed by the Australian and Canadian colonies. It is a significant fact that the same paper, and, indeed, many other Native journals, endeavour to find an analogy between the cases of Ireland and India. They express warm sympathy with the Home Rule party, and watch with keen interest the struggle now proceeding at Westminster.

The names of a considerable number of the leading Hindoos of Calcutta appear among the patrons of the league, but so far it does not seem to have attained much footing beyond this province. I have previously mentioned the marked absence of the Mahomedan element from recent political conferences and mass meetings. This abstention is equally marked in the present movement. Not a single Mussulman name of note appears in the published lists of members. The Mahomedan Observer, the principal organ of Islam in Eastern India, states distinctly that the movement is confined to Hindoos, and denies the right of the league to describe itself as national, seeing that there is an absence of harmony and unity among the various races of India. The same paper does not think the league will meet with much success, and probably most outsiders will share that opinion.

The detention of the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh at Aden has not made so much stir in India as might have been expected. A few Native papers have given vent to some grumbling on the subject, but the general opinion is that after the publication of his manifesto to India no other course was open to the Government. It is stated that the Maharajah himself fully expected to be stopped at Gibraltar and again at Port Said. After leaving the latter port he assumed the Sikh national dress, which he was wearing when, on his arrival at Aden, the Resident came on board and informed him he could not proceed. The Maharajah protested, and accompanied the Resident on shore. It is believed that he will be sent back to England.

The Finance Committee are now busily engaged at work at Simla. It is understood that they are devoting their attention chiefly to rearranging the provincial contracts. Existing financial contracts between the supreme and provincial Governments will expire at the close of the current year. It seems likely that the new contracts will provide that the local Governments shall contribute to Imperial finances more than heretofore. It is possible, too, that savings may be effected in the Public Works Department, but the general belief is that no large retrenchments of expenditure are possible.

The Ghoorka recruits recently sent from Nepaul have been deserting in considerable numbers. The supposed cause is that the Nepaulese Durbar who enlisted them had used compulsion to procure their services. The obvious remedy is to give our recruiting parties free access to Nepaul, where they can easily obtain a large supply of willing recruits.

General Hughes, military member of the Council, is very ill at Simla. It is possible that he may be obliged to take leave to England.

The Mysore Government has appointed two mining prospectors, and has despatched them from the town through the province to ascertain the exact localities of auriferous reefs. A map will be prepared to prevent unscrupulous promoters selling as auriferous land destitute reefs.

The Dacca district in Eastern Bengal has lately been stirred by one of those strange rumours which rise no one knows how and obtain credence among the peasantry over wide tracts of country. In this case the rumour was that the Government had issued an order that no tenant should pay a higher rent than six annas a bigah, equivalent to about 1s. 6d. an acre. So strong a hold did it obtain that the collector was obliged to issue a circular contradicting it. It would, perhaps, not be difficult to trace some connection between this rumour and the recent rent legislation of the Indian Government.

It is stated that one result of the Commander-in-Chief's recent frontier tour may be some modification of the existing scheme of defences in the Peshawur direction.

The railway is now complete through the Bolan Pass. Material is being rapidly carried up, and the line is being laid towards Quetta on earthworks already prepared.

CALCUTTA, MAY 2.

The South Wales Borderers, one British mountain battery, and two regiments of the Bombay Native Infantry have been ordered to reinforce the garrison of Burma. The first-named regiment will take the place at Rangoon of the Somersetshire Light Infantry, which moves to Upper Burma.

The continuance of disorder in Burma is causing some anxiety in India. The general belief here is that it is due to weakness on the part of Mr. Bernard, to his failing to give proper support to the district officers, and to the fact that the civil staff is altogether undermanned, one officer being expected to do the work of three or four.

It is reported from Pondicherry that the Mengwoon Prince, who has hitherto kept himself secluded, has now altered that custom and walks on the beach every evening with the ladies of his family, and is escorted by a guard of twelve men armed with long knives. It is considered that the escort is intended as a claim to Royal honours.

The escort of Mr. Macaulay's mission will consist of fifteen troopers of the 13th Bengal Lancers and sixty men of the 23rd Pioneers, under the command of Captain Gwatkin. Dr. Leahy, now Residency surgeon at Cashmere, will have medical charge. Mr. Paul, the Assistant-Envoy, and Captain Gwatkin are at Simla making arrangements and receiving instructions. It is expected that the mission will assemble at Darjeeling and start about the middle of May.

THE Bengal reliefs for next cold weather are few in number. There are no moves among the Horse Artillery or British Cavalry; five batteries of Field Artillery go to England and four others come out; the Durham Light Infantry is the only regiment going home, its place at Allahabad being taken by the East Surrey Regiment from Ranikhet, while a regiment from England goes to the latter station.

INDIAN PRESS.

[DACOITY IN BURMA.
(Rangoon Gazette.)]

The Burmese are an excitable people, averse to continuous, plodding labour. Their superstitious belief in charms is a great source of courage; and their crass ignorance of the real power of the British Government makes them ridiculously over-estimate their own chance of success. Numbers of them at all times are only kept from dacoity by fear of consequences, not by any moral objections to brigandage. They know that Alompra rose from dacoity to the throne, and this knowledge makes Napoleonic dreams of conquest all the more possible to every dacoit leader of a bold character and imaginative turn of mind. A single success over the British would give him a large following as numbers go in Burma; and neither he nor anyone else realises the immense population of India, from which Government could draw soldiers in overwhelming numbers, if necessary, for war in Burma. He despises these troops as lalas, and he despises with a like arrogance the indigenous races of the country, such as the Karens, who would certainly side with the British. But what has contributed more than anything else to make the revolt so many-headed is that the people of Upper Burma had been demoralised first by gambling, and then by other vexatious exactions on the part of Thebaw and his officials. A people, with such a strong propensity to gambling as the Burmese have, were certain to avail themselves to the full of the chances in this direction which Thebaw afforded them early in his reign. Many of them gambled until they were ruined, and, according to the accounts brought from Mandalay at the time, the infatuation spread to such an extent that parents sold their children to get the wherewithal to go on gambling. When utterly ruined, dacoity was the natural resort; and the mode of dealing with this crime, adopted by the Burmese Government, was such as to foster it. The lesser dacoits were often barbarously and cruelly executed, but the bolder leaders were employed by the king to command expeditions against Chinese, Shans and other enemies. The really bold dacoit leader latterly had nothing to fear; the smaller fry were in greater danger, but the unfortunate peasantry were in the greatest danger of all. They suffered perpetually at the hands of the officials; were always liable to be robbed by the dacoits, and if they appealed for protection were probably robbed by the soldiery as well. Is it any wonder under such circumstances that so many people became criminals? They had everything to gain and nothing to lose by so doing.

The troops, now in the country, are gradually proving to them that dacoity does not pay, and that nothing is now to be gained by it. When this lesson has been learned dacoity should cease, but the best security for the maintenance of order is a due distribution of wealth. The people should not only have nothing to gain by being lawless themselves, but they should have some accumulated wealth to give them a strong reason for helping to prevent lawlessness in others. The people of Upper Burma have at present nothing; and the man who has nothing has not the strong reasons for objecting to disorder which the man of property has. What is wanted is to continue to put down dacoity with a strong hand; to commence public works so as to afford employment to the people, and when they settle down to agriculture not to drain their surplus out of the country, as has been done to a great extent in Lower Burma.

HOME RULE FOR INDIA.

(Pioneer.)

The lessons learned in English political circles by Native agitators of the Bhose and Ghose type are likely to be applied in India in such a form as may seriously hamper the hands of those responsible for the good government of the country. The success which has attended the Parnellites in the case of Ireland has turned the heads of our Native friends, who state quite openly that they in their turn hope to force the hand of Government, just as the Irishmen have done, by ceaseless agitation and attack at every point. In England they will, through Radical sympathisers, bring before Parliament again and again every case in which the decision of the Government of India and the Secretary of State is adverse to their aspirations, appealing also to the House of Commons whenever they think they have caught the executive tripping. Cases of "high-handedness and oppression" will be served up perpetually in the hope that English officials in India will be intimidated by the threat of "a question in the House." They will decline to take any final answer from anyone but Parliament, and will strive to keep up a constant irritation in Indian matters with a view to wearing out the patience of whatever Government may be in power and compelling them to give way for the sake of peace and quietness. They cannot hope to create a compact Indian party in Parliament of such strength as to decide the fate of ministries as the Irish party have done; but they count upon always being able to command the sympathy and support of certain members whose aim is notoriety at all costs, and who will be willing tools in their hands. So much for their plan of operations in England, which are more likely to result in failure than success. In India their modus operandi will be more mischievous. Their first aim is to create the machinery of wide spread agitation, which they can put in motion at a moment's notice; and for this purpose they are utilising existing political and social associations and collecting funds under various pretexts. They can even now arrange for "spontaneous outbursts of national feeling" in all the principal towns, but not content with this they wish to "rouse the people" and by securing the holding of mass meetings and the signing of monster petitions to create spurious public opinion, to which reference can be made with all due solemnity by supporters in Parliament. That they are not making much headway as yet is perhaps due to the fact that their organisation is defective, but they are by no means idle, and when any important question again crops up we shall probably see to what extent their efforts have reached. In Bengal the machinery of agitation is certainly being perfected, but then Bengal is tainted with sedition, and politicians at home look askance at everything that comes out of it. The agitator class are shrewd enough to see this, and they aim at extending their operations all over India, so that something like unity of purpose may be secured. The grandiose resolutions of "National Conferences" are quoted in support of the view that India is united in certain subjects, and that every race and creed are at one in their demands for political power; but then the mass of the people are silent and inert, and so they must be "roused." The rousing process in Bengal need not excite great anxiety in the minds of the rulers of India, populous though the province may be, for the people are a mild and peace-loving race; but if this agitation spreads among the more manly races of Upper India, and they are misled by these agitators, then there may be trouble to be faced beside which the reign of lawlessness in Ireland will be but as child's play. That India will benefit by this systematic agitation we absolutely deny; it will put an end to good government and make our present benevolent rule an impossibility; for once an alien Government is met at every turn by intimidation and threats, benevolence has to be put aside and a sterner policy adopted. We are glad to notice that the aspirations of New India are not met in at all a sympathising spirit by the more thoughtful and far-seeing Native gentlemen of the old school, who see nothing but sedition and discontent as the result of agitation on the model we have described. It is to these that the Government must look for the means of placing before the people the true meaning of the wild and fanciful schemes which are now put forward so glibly; their influence must be enlisted against the agitators, or suddenly India may find itself led to the brink of a precipice with no guiding hand to save it from ruin. The patriots who hope to make it a second Ireland will perhaps see how dangerous it is to take Western agitation as their model; it cannot be applied to India save as a slow match is applied to a train of gunpowder. Do they wish to do this?

ANGLO-INDIAN EXTRAVAGANCE.

(Times of India.)

It is commonly said of retired Anglo-Indians that they have the habits of princes and the purses of paupers. The extravagant tastes and lavish self-indulgence which distinguished the Joseph Sedleys of an earlier generation have survived the decay of the pagoda tree, and the Englishman of the present day, retiring after long residence in India, seldom takes home with him more than enough to enable him to aspire to the ordinary suburban villa or "the cottage of gentility" by the seaside. His income generally dies with him, and his children, unless they have been educated during the palmiest days of his Indian career, are seldom fit to occupy a position equal to that which he has looked on as his birthright. Not only has the depreciated rupee diminished all settled incomes, but the cost of living in India has greatly increased during the last twenty years. Domestic servants are neither so submissive nor so efficient as they used to be. The bazaar-book of 1886 is a document that would have ensured the dismissal of any butler who should have had the hardihood to present it a quarter of a century ago. And not only in matters of daily consumption have expenses grown. The greater facilities afforded by cheap rates of passage to England, have made the journeys home more frequent than they used to be, and a trip to England is considered a necessity now, where in former years the exigencies of the case would have been met by a season at the hills. Now that imperial finances are about to pass under review, it would be well for Anglo-Indians to take the hint and reconsider the great question of ways and means in respect of their own households. The privy purse is suffering, as well as the public fisc, from the continuous outpour of silver, and a change in the mode of social life is absolutely necessary to adapt expenditure to the diminished purchasing power of the rupee. Yet society relaxes nothing in its demands on its members. The same princely style of living, burra khans, at which champagne is de rigueur, subscriptions of all kinds, elaborate furniture, expensive carriages and showy horses, are expected as matters of course, notwithstanding that incomes have been reduced by the fall of exchange by at least one quarter. Another wrench of the screw has been accomplished this month by the introduction of the Income-tax, which will tell most severely on the very class most affected by the loss in exchange. Two and a half rupees out of every hundred will now go to Government for the privilege of living in this delightful country, and this at a time when twenty-five rupees disappear mysteriously out of every hundred rupees sent home for the maintenance and education of that family with which the bulk of Anglo-Indians are now blessed. This in itself is no doubt a new departure in Anglo-Indian life, for the expenses of education in England entail upon those whose quiver is full burdens which to the bachelor societies of the Company's days were almost unknown.

It is time, we think, to protest against the levy of those social taxes which were imposed at a time when moderate incomes were far more capable of bearing them than they now are. It is exceedingly probable that on the official part of the community, the necessity for domestic economy has already forced itself. And we cannot but think that all classes of society would be glad if, by general consent, many of the unmeaning and unnecessary expenses of Indian life were curtailed. There is no doubt that a foolish emulation has much to do with the retention of the old scale of living. Many are only waiting for others to take the initiative, but there are few who recognise it as a positive duty to set the example of a practical protest against these social imposts. A young man, on his first arrival in India, seems to consider that he is called upon "by his position" to keep three or four horses, and is incidentally led into speculating on the possibility of his turning them to account by running them at the yearly races at his station. It is very astonishing that lads who at home would probably hardly have obtained more than the income of a curate will, on arrival in India, accept the old traditions of the country and regard it as necessary to social success that they should make a figure on the turf, should join two or three clubs, should give bachelor's balls, should back their very uncertain skill at whist in gold mohurs robbed from the future, and should generally draw bills on their prospects, which, when the day comes for their acceptance, will very seriously embarrass them. But it is still more astonishing that after a few years of living fully up to, or even beyond their incomes, when griffinage is past, notwithstanding that they have no past savings to fall back upon, young men of five or six and twenty feel not the least hesitation in adding to their embarrassments by marriage. Prudential restraints have very little weight with the Anglo-Indian, and parental solicitude seldom seeks to inquire too curiously into the habits and economies of the promising youth who is about to relieve the house of one of its fair daughters.

When middle age arrives, reduction in the scale of living is looked upon as impossible, and our social duties require of us that we should make sacrifices to mere conventionalities, which cripple us when called upon to give real help to those who have calls upon us, and which prevent our making any adequate provision for a comfortable home on retirement from India. The discomfort, the worry, the loss of temper, and even of health, the loss of opportunities of doing real good, which this habit of unmeaning display involves, perhaps never sufficiently force themselves upon the notice of Anglo-Indians till they culminate in the last years of residence out here, when provision must needs be made for an establishment at home. It is not till then that the result of this extravagance is fully realised, and the natural penalty which attaches to such a breach of the dictates of common sense, thus generally escapes the notice of those who might otherwise profit by example. It is to the older members of our society that we must look for the lead in a social reform which pecuniary pressure is daily rendering more necessary. The Anglo-Indian community if they are wise can do a great deal more for themselves than can ever be accomplished by the most painstaking of Parliamentary Committees, and the new style of life we would in all seriousness urge them to adopt would have the additional advantage of being infinitely more comfortable than the old.

THE MADRAS ARMY.

(Times of India.)

No army the world has ever seen is officered like the Madras Army. Who ever heard, out of Wonderland, of an army in which there were 222 lieutenant-colonels and only thirty majors? Nor is much improvement visible when we go a step lower, and find that there are thirty-seven captains to officer all the horse and foot of the Madras Army. These figures are so startling that comment on them is almost superfluous. Still, their significance is enhanced when we remember that they mean that in the Madras Army there are more than seven colonels to each major and exactly six colonels to each captain. The sarcasm that the Indian Army was officered by old men and boys has been long in circulation and has passed current without any particular meaning being attached to it. It bids fair, however, to justify its existence from the present state of the Madras Army. Take the 14th Madras Infantry, for example. It has on its rolls two full colonels, two lieutenant-colonels, and five subalterns. Of these gentlemen, a full colonel, a lieutenant-colonel, and three lieutenants are actually doing duty with the corps. There is no major and there is no captain. From lieutenant-colonel to lieutenant one passes at once without any intermediate step. Nor is this by any means a rare case. Turning back a page we find the very next argument, the 13th Madras Infantry, a trifle worse off, if anything. True, they have a captain on the rolls, but he is a mere illusion, as he has been sent off to another regiment, and the 13th is left with a full colonel, two lieutenant-colonels, one subaltern who is adjutant, and two subalterns who are learning their work as probationers. These two young gentlemen have about eight years' service between them. The two senior colonels of the regiment have sixty-seven years' service between them. We would not for a moment dream of treating a subject so serious with even the slightest approach to levity, but there is something peculiar to the verge of quaintness in a regiment officered by three colonels and three subalterns. The feelings of the last joined probationer, for instance, if he found himself at mess with a lieutenant-colonel on either side of him, and a full colonel sitting opposite to him, must be left to the imagination. If asked to make a fourth at a rubber afterwards with his venerable companions, he would be almost certain to revoke from sheer nervousness, and would probably retire to bed afterwards, in doubt as to whether he had better blow out his brains or only retire from the service.

BENGAL.

THE Viceroy has shown the practical interest he feels in the success of the Muir College by promising to give a medal annually, for competition among the students, during his tenure of office in India.

THE Begum of Bhopal, before leaving Calcutta, made a donation of Rs. 1,500 to the District Charitable Society, and placed Rs. 7,200 in the hands of the Director of Public Instruction for the purpose of sending a Muhammadan student to England to study medicine or law. Her Highness gave several other benefactions for the help of poor Mussulman students.

A DISPENSARY for women and children has been opened in Calcutta under the auspices of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund. It is under the management of Mrs. Van Ingen, L.M.S. of the Madras University, and consultations and medicines are given free at certain hours. On payment of a small fee pardah nashins can secure private entrance and consultation. This is the first female dispensary in Calcutta of an entirely unsectarian character.

MADRAS.

PROMPTED by the kindly feeling for others which is characteristic of her, and especially by sympathy for a wife on the eve of her confinement, Mrs. Grant Duff paid a visit, in her private capacity, to the ex-Queen of Burma, a few days before her departure from Madras. She was received with much natural grace and dignity by the elder Queen, who wore with the national costume one magnificent diamond in very artistically braided hair.

MR. M. F. LAVELLE, the discoverer of the Colar gold fields, has been convinced, says a Madras paper, by close personal examination, that copper, tin, lead, and silver ores abound in the country lying between Sangam and Cumbum. Indeed, he considers that the locality is as rich in minerals as Cornwall.

BOMBAY.

MR. T. D. MACKENZIE, Junior Collector and Magistrate of Broach, has been appointed Secretary in the Revenue, Financial, and General Departments during Mr. John Nugent's absence on furlough. Mr. De Courcy Atkins, who has for some time past been engaged on Forest Settlement work in the Thana district, will act as Under-Secretary in the same Department during Mr. Monteath's furlough.

THE Bombay Gazette states that the Governor of Bombay has recently given a noteworthy proof of his desire to come into closer contact with the members of the Public Services. A circular has been addressed to the officials of the various departments inviting them, whenever they are at the seat of Government, to call at Government House, where his Excellency will be pleased to receive those of them whose personal acquaintance he has not been able to make.

THE Burma Gazette contains the following notification in regard to Colonel Sladen:—"Colonel E. B. Sladen, Commissioner of Arakan and Chief Political Officer with the Burma Field Force, sails in a few days from Burma, where, for more than thirty years, he has served with distinction and success. In the Tenasserim and Arakan divisions Colonel Sladen's name and work are gratefully remembered by the people of many districts. At Mandalay, during trying times he, to the satisfaction of the late King of Burma, and to the advantage of the Indian Government, discharged the duties of political agent; his influence was effective both in preventing cruelties and in obtaining commercial concessions. His career in Burma has closed with distinction, for in his capacity of chief political officer with the Burma Field Force he has gained the warm commendation of the commander of the force, and the cordial acknowledgments of his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General of India."

THE INDIAN AND COLONIAL EXHIBITION.

(Morning Post.)

The Indian and Colonial Exhibition, which is so shortly to be opened to the public, bids fair to eclipse its numerous predecessors, not only in general splendour, but in its unique significance. The idea, which is authoritatively asserted to have been in the mind of the Prince of Wales since the year 1878, is in many ways a happy departure from the groove to which we were becoming habituated. When the Fisheries Exhibition was opened in 1883 it not only served to provide Londoners with a new and congenial place of resort, but it attracted by the importance of the industries with which it dealt, and by the novelty and fascination which, for the landsman at least, surrounds everything connected with the sea. Its successor, the "Healthier," did not possess the same intrinsic and definite interest, but it was inaugurated just when people had discovered the pleasures of a well-arranged entertainment with plenty of air. Last year's Exhibition was even more dependent on such incidental inventions as good music, coloured lamps, and iced coffee. It is to be feared that had any special and severely instructive subject been chosen this year the same feature would have finally asserted its predominance. But the whole idea is now altered to an entirely different level, and one which appeals to a much wider range of sympathies. For the first time in history we are to have a practical and peaceful illustration of some of the numerous things implied by the existence of the British Empire. A great deal is said, and rightly said, about the magnificent inheritance by which one-fifth of the globe is united under the sceptre of the Queen and Empress. We drink to the toast of "Britain one Empire." We favour maps in which it is sought to convey some idea of its size by marking it out in red. We teach the school children to patter through the goodly list of our colonies. We call for Indian cavalry, Canadian boatmen, and Australian volunteers to aid us in the deserts of Africa. By all this we glean some idea of the value and even of the quantity of our fellow-subjects beyond the seas. But few of us, only, indeed, the more exceptionally favoured travellers, have been able to gather much definite knowledge of their quality. It was in the course of his Eastern travels that the Prince of Wales appears to have been struck with the great work which might be done by disseminating through his mother's dominions greater information as to the unrivalled industries and the magnificent races therein contained. The consequence is the Exhibition just about to be opened, the chief practical value of which lies in one transcendent fact. It is the microcosm of our Imperial greatness.

TEA ADULTERATION.

(Standard.)

Sir Robert Hart's protest against the deterioration of Chinese tea is excellent and timely; the Ysung-li-Yamen shows its accustomed shrewdness in enforcing it. But it may be a question whether the Inspector-General of the Maritime Customs of the Chinese Empire believes that any good may possibly come of his report. The quantity of tea grown in China is limited. It might be enlarged, perhaps, but all the instincts of the people revolt from change—in culture of the soil as in other things. If the natural product of the country has been overpassed to meet the wants of Europe and America the only true remedy is to increase the area of the plantations. The quantity of honest tea which could be put into the market has changed but slightly for many years, and since customers perpetually enlarge their demand the Chinaman has naturally fallen back on adulteration. Everybody knows, who will take the trouble to inquire, that the genuine herb could not be sold in England, though it were of the poorest class, under five shillings a pound. Ten shillings the catty—about twenty-one ounces—is a moderate price so near the plantations as Singapore. If actual purity were enforced by the Ysung-li-Yamen the consequences to Chinese trade would be more serious than adulteration could work; but Sir Robert Hart knows that, and he demands, of course, only comparative purity. Furthermore, if the good principle were carried far English consumers would revolt. Those who return from the Far East are apt to bring home presents of "real good tea," until they have learned by experience that their friends actually dislike it. We are used to adulteration; and it is this habit, more than anything else, which checks the consumption of Indian tea.

LORD RIPON ON INDIA.

The Marquis of Ripon addressed a largely-attended meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce on Thursday afternoon. He said he went to India in the year 1880, and he was there until 1884, a period of great prosperity in that country, and they were spared from taking any serious share in the tremendous famines to which that country was always liable. Such was the prosperity of the country in those years that they were able to pay their share towards the Egyptian war to the extent of between £600,000 and £700,000 without having recourse to extra taxation. But in 1884-85 a change came over the country, and her commercial condition since then had not been so prosperous. There had been a very serious falling off in the importation of gold during the last two years, and they could therefore come to no other conclusion than that these years had shown a marked diminution of the general prosperity of the country with the years gone before. In 1879-80 raw cotton was exported from India to the value of £11,145,000; in 1883-84 it was £14,383,000; but in 1884-85 the exports had fallen to £13,236,000, and it was believed that the falling off was due to the deficient crops of that year. But while these returns showed a falling off, it was a fact that this was not so in respect to the wheat trade in India, the returns for which in 1885-86 showed an increase. Speaking of questions connected with trade and finance in India, it was impossible to overlook the question of exchange. This was a question deserving the most serious consideration of the public, and particularly of the trading and commercial public and of the Government, both in India and at home. He, personally, had no remedy to offer; it was a question for economists and financiers carefully to consider; but it was also a question which was increasing in importance year by year. There was one point connected with the matter on which he wished to say a word, namely, the comparative value of silver—that was, what was the purchasing power of the rupee in India as compared with what it was ten or twenty years ago? A Commission of Inquiry in connection with the India Office had recently made an investigation of the matter, and had come to the conclusion that there was no substantial difference. Turning to the question of Indian finance, the result of his observations of the progress of the Indian revenue was that, undoubtedly, in times of ordinary and fair prosperity, it had a distinct tendency gradually to increase. There was doubtless a gradual tendency to improve; but they would not see in India what Mr. Gladstone called the "leaps and bounds" of progress. The growth of the Indian revenue could only be slow and gradual, as the power of taxation in that country was limited within very narrow bounds. In looking at the question of Indian finance they should always keep that fact distinctly in mind. The land tax could not be increased, and the income tax was extremely unproductive. Referring to the large increase which had recently taken place in India for military purposes, without saying a word about the propriety of that expenditure, he thought there was laid upon us an absolute necessity of doing all we possibly could to produce countervailing reductions to the utmost possible extent in directions which would not check the progress, intellectual and moral, of the country or the people. If the military were to be increased in India for meeting possible dangers on our frontiers, this country ought to do her utmost to meet that increased expenditure by every possible reduction of another kind in Indian military expenditure. The position of finance was sound, but the margin with which Indian financiers had to deal was very small. The question of railway extension in India was one in which he took a great interest; but if we were to construct the 3,000 miles of railway which were still required to keep the country safe against famine, they must use their influence in favour of economy in other respects.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

COLONEL R. GRIFFITH, Commandant, 27th Madras Infantry, having been appointed to the command of the Infantry Brigade at Bhamo, has proceeded to join.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR CHARLES GOUGH, Commanding the Allahabad Division, shortly proceeds on six months' leave. Brigadier-General T. E. Gordon, Commanding the Rohilkh and District, will, we believe, get the officiating command.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL H. F. HUTTON, 1st Battalion Royal Welsh Fusiliers, who has been with the battalion in Burma, is retiring from the service. Colonel Hutton's first commission bears date the first April 1859; he has therefore completed twenty-seven years' service.

COLONEL C. R. MATHEWS has been appointed to officiate as Deputy Judge Advocate-General, Bengal, vice Lieutenant-Colonel M. Clement; Lieutenant-Colonel Holmes to officiate as Deputy Judge Advocate in place of Colonel Mathews; and Major Stoddart, 5th Bengal Infantry, to officiate as Deputy Judge Advocate, vice Major Sanderson on furlough.

THE 27th Punjab Infantry, which has for some time past been warned for service, has now been ordered to Burma. The 38th Bengal Infantry will relieve the regiment at Calcutta.

COLONEL F. H. WILLIAMSON, 1st East Lancashire Regiment, has been appointed Commandant of the Murree Depot.

THE Remount Purchasing Committee for Bengal Cavalry has concluded its labours, and will break up about the 15th instant.

THE Punjab Government has completed its part of the business connected with the transfer of the Frontier Force from the local authorities to the Commander-in-Chief, the whole of the correspondence on the subject having been sent from Lahore to the Military Department and the Foreign Office a fortnight ago. The orders of the Government of India have now to be awaited before any further steps can be taken.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

How jolly, says the old Spanish proverb, to have a good feed, and not to pay for it!! Can anything be more descriptive of the position of any grandiloquent old muddler who may desire to give away the property of every Irish landholder in order to keep himself in office? Compulsorily to alienate other people's property, if practised on a small scale, used to be a crime, and, despite all the tomfoolery called judge-made law, is so now. But, if carried out to the extent of confiscating, by a (purely fictitious) payment of about a fourth of its value, the soil of an entire island, comprising some twenty-one million acres, it is a grand feat, entitling the performer to the unceasing praise of mankind in this world, and to endless ambrosia and nectar in the next.

Considering the position in which our dear country stands—to say that it is on the brink of a political abyss conveys but the faintest idea of the real facts of the case—it is impossible, in taking up this number of the "National Review," not to be struck with the fact that two articles, and those, perhaps, the most instructive of all, are devoted to showing the results of Democratic rule. Many, perhaps most, of our readers, will cross the silver streak in the course of the next few months. Let them—without seasickness this time—cross it with us, and be "personally conducted" by Captain Norman and Mr. Hitchman. "Experientia docet," said Mrs. Micawber, and we may well benefit from the experience of our nearest Continental neighbours.

The proof the pudding is said to be the eating, and the modern test of the success of a Government is what is called its "economy." Not, mind you, economy in any wide sense; not laying out to the best advantage what money is spent; but bringing the year's expenditure, at whatever sacrifice of efficiency, to the lowest possible figure. Now, no one would accuse the administration under the second French Empire of parsimony. Money was spent lavishly, if not discreetly. The army was, in point of fact, hampered; high officials were extravagantly paid, and the expenses of the Court had become a byword throughout Europe. Yet assuming, as we may safely do, that peculation (to which—barring, perhaps, Spaniards and Russians—no officials are more prone than the French) is equal under an Empire and a democracy, and that, therefore, an equal proportion of a sum voted is applied to the purposes to which it is nominally assigned, we find that, under the Empire of Napoleon, the Budget amounted (1869) to £69,600,000, under the Republic (1885) to £142,000,000, or some millions sterling more than double the highest Budget under the Empire.

So much for the total; though some of the entries are suggestive. Captain Norman compares the outlay in 1875 and in 1885. These years will serve for our purpose as well as any others. The French Republic had existed, in 1875 five, in 1885, fifteen, years; and it is significant enough to observe the increase of expenditure, especially in the items which, as every Government official knows, are least easily verified. Printing rises from £3,000 to £10,000, the salaries of the "Higher Foreign office officials" from £200,000 to £350,000, the pensions from 1½ to nearly 4½ millions sterling; Public Instruction, the least easily checked of all, from about 1½ to over 5 millions; and so on.

Corruption and jobbery, in fact, reign paramount. To use the writer's phrase, "under the Republic a laxity in pecuniary matters has crept into the breasts of French Statesmen which has scarcely a parallel in history" (p. 329). "The country is permeated with jobbery" (p. 333). "Many of the lines are called chemins de fer électoraux" (p. 332). "As a reward for the defeat of the Duc de Broglie at a recent election, a short line was constructed which cost £51,000 a mile (!)"

That the deficit in the annual Budgets has risen from three millions sterling in 1869 to more than thirteen millions in 1882, and in 1883, will cause no surprise; though no one who is behind the scenes of French political life need be told that no official chicane was spared in order to conceal so unwelcome a fact.

Now let us see what the Frenchman gets for his 142 millions. Does he get freedom? Far from it:—

"According to the Advanced Radical school France," says Captain Norman, "possesses every element of happiness save one—Free Trade. Yet we cannot point to one single instance where her people enjoy as much freedom or as much happiness, or as light a financial burden, as do the people of the Kingdom of England. There the curse of officialdom reigns supreme, and a man is hampered with an ever present dread of those ominous words 'au nom du peuple Français,' from the moment that his parents describe his birth to the officials at the Mairie, to that last moment when the Commissaire of Police places his seal of office on the dead man's coffin; then and not till then, is the Frenchman really free. From the age of twenty to that of forty he is bound to military service, without permission he dare not leave his native village. . . . To carry the produce of his farmyard to the neighbouring town he is forced to submit to the iniquitous octroi, and even in conveying game shot in one Department to another he is liable to the same impost. Should he change his residence merely from one street to the next he must get permission to remove the contents of his modest cellar, be it of cider or be it of champagne, and for this permission a tax is invariably levied." And this land, in which nothing is free, is held up as a model to free England!

Many excellent Churchmen, who may have been "floored" in argument with Dissenters, will find fresh weapons for their armoury in Mr. Stanley Leighton's very interesting paper on "The Establishment and Endowment of Nonconformity;" the statistics given at p. 347 showing that the Church of England is, practically, the only religious communion which does not receive Government aid, cannot be too widely known.

Since the silly prohibition of the membership of the Primrose League to Roman Catholics by poor Bishop Bagshawe of Nottingham was withdrawn, under orders from Rome, it is understood that many members of the Church of Rome have joined the Association; and Lady Malmesbury's interesting account of its proceedings will doubtless bring in many recruits from persons of all denominations. Lord Cranbrook effectually demolishes any disguise which dismemberment has assumed, and shows the hideous apparition in its true colour. On the other Essays, which give interest to a particularly good number, we have left ourselves no space to remark at length; but Mr. H. D. Traill's contrast between old "Hobbes and the modern Radical" is a spirited bit of writing, which should on no account be missed.

BURMA AS IT WAS, AS IT IS, AND AS IT WILL BE.*

Towards the close of the eighteenth century the Governor-General of India sent an Embassy to the Court of Burma for the purpose of strengthening our commercial relations, and preventing the French from gaining a footing in the country. Captain Symes, the officer selected for this purpose, was not very successful, but he obtained a Royal order granting permission for the establishment of a British Residency at Rangoon. After the lapse of a year (1796) Captain Hiram Cox was deputed to act as Agent, but he was subjected to so many indignities that he returned to Calcutta. Once again (in 1802) Captain Symes was despatched to Ava, but he was persistently and elaborately insulted, and eventually went back to Bengal without settling anything. For nearly a quarter of a century the patience of the British Government bore all, and suffered all, but at length the indignities heaped upon their representatives, and the insolence displayed by the Burmese left no alternative, and in 1825 war was declared against the Lord of all the White Elephants; the result was the annexation of Arakan and Tenasserim. The lesson did not profit the Burmese, and once more, after another interval of like duration, a second war was commenced, and in a few months Pegu was added to the dominions of the East India Company. The King withdrew to his domains, angry and sulky, and it was not till 1862 that diplomatic intercourse with the Court of Burma was re-established. At this date Sir Arthur Thayer negotiated a treaty, and left an Agent at Mandalay. But notwithstanding these attempts to enter into communication with the Lord of the Umbrellas—attempts renewed in 1867, when General Fyche, concluded a further treaty—relations with Upper Burma remained "incomplete, unsatisfactory, and ill-assured." So matters dragged along till 1878, when King Thebaw ascended the throne, and commenced a series of insults, indignities, cruelties, and wrongs, which none save a long-suffering Viceroy of India would have overlooked for an instant; but raids in British territory, and massacres in the capital, followed by paralysis of trade and insecurity of life were ills which could not be endured for ever, and in the year of grace, 1885, it became necessary, for a third time, to teach the Burmese Court that their day of grace had passed. This time half measures were neither expedient nor, indeed, possible. French intrigue threatened to occasion grave complications. British subjects had been plundered, and the King had refused either to listen to reason or to afford redress. So Burma was annexed, and King Thebaw no longer allowed to disgrace a throne established in blood and nurtured in oppression and wrong.

This termination of the Alomparan dynasty brought the British Government face to face with China, which latter power at once set up a claim to sovereign rights over the country thus incorporated with the domains of the Empress of India. Mr. Scott examines this matter with care. His view may be gathered from the concluding paragraphs of the chapter which he devotes to this point:—"It would be equally unwise and impolitic to recognise Suzerain rights which, if they ever existed at all, date from the time of the early Manchus, and have no existence in modern times, except in the brains of plenipotentiaries who qualify a knowledge of musty old records with a smattering of Western international usages. No one would combat the Chinese claims with greater vigour than the Burmese themselves. There is no reason why we should be more foolishly complaisant."

For good or ill the annexation of Upper Burma is a fait accompli, and it cannot be otherwise than a matter of interest to consider what is the future in store for this last addition to the British Empire. On this point Mr. Scott speaks with no hesitating tongue:—"The potential wealth in Upper Burma, not to speak of Western China, the Shan States and Karennee is simply incalculable. We have now the means of opening them up to our trade by railways and road, and a failure to do so as fast as it can be done would be a very short-sighted policy. The money expended on these works would at one and the same time reassure the people, pacify the country, and give the inhabitants the purchasing power they stand in need of." But there are timely words of warning:—"It is too commonly assumed that the annexation of Upper Burma will result in an immediate and widespread increase to our trade; that we shall find hundreds of new customers, not only in the new province, but beyond in China, and in the Shan States, and so on. This is delusive, and may produce a revulsion which would be equally lamentable. . . . Wealth is certain to come in time, but it cannot come for some years. . . . Everything, in fact, conspires to show that Burma is the most valuable addition to our Empire made for many years."

As regards the people they have been soured in disposition by years of grinding oppression, courage having developed into ferocity and open-heartedness into gloom and suspicion; added to this they are "most marvellously and inconceivably lazy." When they get a little money they spend the greater part on some pious work, and eat, drink, and sleep till the coffers are empty. "So," says Mr. Scott, "the Burman jogs on through a calm and contented existence, the most cheerful of mortals, troubled by no cares, and free from all the temptations of ambition." This does not sound promising, but it is at any rate satisfactory to find that amidst all his failings our indolent friend is endowed with "sturdy independence," a virtue which should make amends for many a weakness of lesser import.

Such is "Burma as it was, as it is, and as it will be." Mr. Scott has said his say plainly, simply, and without any affectation or bombast. His work is sure to find readers amongst the many sons of England ever ready to avail themselves of an opening for enterprise and commerce. To such it speaks for itself: "Good wine needs no bush." But its appearance is also opportune, in so far as it disproves the silly contentions of the silly enthusiasts who wish to have it believed that the recent war which ended in the annexation of Burma was a crime and a blunder. Such it speaks with the voice of authority. It may be hoped they have sense sufficient to appreciate its teachings, and comprehend its lessons; in such case the nation would owe a debt of gratitude to "Shway Yoe" for his timely and unpretentious brochure.

OCEANA.*

In our issue of April 19th we drew attention to Froude's most attractive work "Oceana." Since then we have received a reprint of the same at the reduced price of 2s. 6d. The enterprize of the publishers in thus bringing this delightful volume within the reach of everyone who takes an interest in our Colonies will, we trust, be rewarded with a large share of public patronage. And those who thus spend so small a modicum of this world's goods will never regret the few pence which will minister at once pleasure and profit.

"THE Sunshine Follows the Rain" (published by William Ozerny, Oxford-street) is the title and refrain of a bright and cheery song, which, though the lyric has long been known to a few, has only recently had music composed for it. This has been done by Miss Marianne Matthews. It is arranged for a contralto voice, and is in the key of G. We may recall this pleasing piece to some memories by quoting the opening couplet:—

"I heard a song on the moorland brown,
When the days grew fair and long."

OBITUARY.

HON. LIONEL TENNYSON.

The Honourable Lionel Tennyson, the intelligence of whose death at Aden on the homeward voyage from India has just reached this country, was a younger son of the Poet Laureate. Though possessed of a fair share of this world's goods, he scorned a life of indolent ease and aimless inactivity; so at an early age he entered the public service in the Political and Secret Branch of the India Office. But the routine of official life was, in a measure, irksome to him, and he never concealed his dislike to the "red-tape" existence which is the lot of everyone who aspires to high place and station in the employ of the State. Nevertheless, he could do honest work, and do it well, as is conclusively proved by the circumstance that the Moral and Material Progress Report, which bears his name, is deemed by high authorities one of the most satisfactory compilations amongst the many of the sort which have seen the light of day. Inheriting in some measure the literary instincts of his father, his thoughts naturally inclined to the attractions of letters, and the name he bore afforded him in early life that position and repute which are, as a rule, only attained after diligent toil and repeated effort. His labours were possibly spasmodic, but they were undeniably sound, and he never placed before the public statements which he had not taken pains to verify, or hazarded opinions hasty and inconsiderate in their inception and ill-digested and crude in their origin. An honest writer, he gained honest admiration, an admiration in no way diminished by the circumstance that he was always glad to avow assistance and proclaim help. Inspired, too, with an enthusiasm for the mighty East, he embraced every opportunity of rendering his home a centre for Indians and Indian thought, and, with the sympathetic co-operation of a wife in every way fitted to second his efforts, his house was rapidly becoming a focus of Eastern thought and Oriental ideas. In the midst of this sphere of usefulness the acceptance of his friend, Lord Dufferin, of the exalted post of Viceroy of India afforded Mr. Tennyson an opportunity of visiting Hindustan, and contemplating with his own eyes scenes which were known to him only by repute and hearsay. While on this intent he had the misfortune to get jungle fever, and was compelled to flee for his life; but the arrow of destiny had fled from the bow, and ere he reached England the intelligence arrived that his place was fated to know him no more.

His race of life was short, but during a brief span of years he had succeeded in ingratiating himself with those with whom he came in contact, and not a few in the great metropolis, alike colleagues, acquaintances and companions, will miss the genial smile of a man who never made an enemy, and who never lost a friend.

SIR WILLIAM ROSE ROBINSON, K.C.S.I., formerly of the Madras Civil Service, was the third son of the late Mr. William Rose Robinson, of Clemiston, Mid Lothian, sometime Sheriff of Lanarkshire, by his marriage with Mary, daughter of Mr. James Douglas, of Orchardton and Almorner, in the stewardry of Kirkcudbright, he was born at Raehill, near Glasgow, in 1822, and was educated at Haileybury College and at Bonn. He entered the Madras Civil Service in 1842, and was for some years second member of the Board of Revenue of Madras. In 1873 he took his seat as a member of the Council of the Government of Madras, and he served as acting Governor of Madras for a short time in 1875, on the death of Lord Hobart. He was nominated a Companion of the Order of the Star of India in 1866, and advanced to the dignity of a Knight Commander of that Order in 1876. Sir William Robinson married, in 1850, Julia, daughter of Mr. Samuel Thomas, of the Madras Civil Service.

CAPTAIN W. MOORCROFT HEARSAY was one of the gallant band of heroes who fought and bled in the memorable defence of the Lucknow Residency during the terrible days of the Mutiny. A member of one of the oldest Anglo-Indian families, he was born in the year 1811, near Bareilly, Rohilkund, and entered the service of the King of Oudh in his 25th year. With a rare fortune which has seldom fallen to the lot of a military man, he was engaged in active service almost without a break from the beginning of his career down to 1859, having been wounded on several occasions and receiving valuable khilluts and the thanks of the Government for conspicuous gallantry. He was chiefly employed in bringing to submission the barons of Oudh, who had from time to time raised the standard of revolt against constituted authority. In 1849 Captain Hearsay's personal influence at the Court strengthened the hands of the Resident, Colonel Low (afterwards Major-General and Member of the Supreme Council), in resisting the attempt to place Moona Jan on the throne to the exclusion of the rightful heir, Hyder Ali Shah. Two years later he was instrumental in arresting the notorious dacoit chief, Mukram Singh, for whose release Captain Hearsay was offered by the outlaw's mother, his weight, with his arms (matchlock, shield and sword) in gold, which, it is needless to add, he indignantly refused. Passing over some of the minor exploits of the deceased, we now come to the time of the annexation of Oudh, when was gazetted to the H. E. I. Co.'s service with the rank of Captain, and appointed Commandant of a battalion of the Frontier Police. On the outbreak of the Sepoy Revolt he was posted to the Intelligence Department at Lucknow. When hemmed in, in the Residency, he was placed in command of No. 2 square, behind the native hospital and immediately opposite the enemy's post in Johannes's house. He was next ordered to lead Sir Colin Campbell's force through Lucknow, but having been wounded in the chest while leaving the Residency in disguise, the duty developed upon the late Mr. Kavanagh. How he discharged it is recorded in the pages of history. Captain Hearsay was present throughout the siege with the Intelligence Department under Sir James Outram. He was subsequently attached in the same capacity to the column under Brigadier Colin Troup for the suppression of the rebellion in the Kheri district. For the valuable services rendered on those occasions a talookhdari was conferred upon him in lieu of a pension.

On the 6th inst. the Viceroy received a telegram from his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, thanking his Excellency and the people of India for their ready response in sending exhibits to the Indian and Colonial Exhibition.

DEPARTMENTAL DITTIES.

A CODE OF MORALS.

Lest you should think this story true
I merely mention I Evolved it lately. 'Tis my ninth Unmitigated misstatement.

Now Jones has left his new-wed bride to keep his house in order,
And hied away to the Hurrum Hills above the Afghan border,
To sit on a rock with a heliograph; but ere he left he taught
His wife the working of the Code that sets the miles at naught.

And Love had made him very sage, as Nature made her fair;
So Cupid and Apollo linked, per heliograph, the pair.
At dawn, across the Hurrum Hills, he flashed her counsel wise—
At e'en the dying sunset bore her husband's homilies.

He warned her 'gainst seductive youths in scarlet clad and gold,
As much as 'gainst the blandishments paternal of the old;
But kept his gravest warnings for (hereby the ditty hangs)
That snowy-haired Lothario, Lieutenant-General Bangs.

'Twas General Bangs, with Aide and Staff, that tittuped on the way,
When they beheld a heliograph tempestuously at play.
They thought of Border risings, and of stations sacked and burnt—
So stopped to take the message down—and this is what they learnt:—

"Dash dot dot dot, dot, dot dash, dot dash dot." The General swore:—

"Was ever general officer addressed as 'dear' before?
'My Love' i'faith! 'My Duck' Gadzooks! 'My darling popsy-wop!'

"Spirit of great Lord Wolseley, who is on that mountain-top?"

The artless Aide-de-Camp was mute; the gilded staff were still,
As, dumb with pent-up mirth, they booked that message from the hill;
And, clear as summer lighting flare, the husband's warning rar:—
"Don't dance or ride with General Bangs—a most immoral man!"

[At dawn, across the Hurrum Hills, he flashed her counsel wise—
But, howsoever Love be blind, the world at large hath eyes]
With damnatory dot and dash he heliographed his wife
Some interesting details of the General's private life.

The artless Aide-de-Camp was mute; the shining Staff were still,
And red and ever redder grew the General's shaven gill
And this is what he said at last (his feelings matter not):—
"I think we've tapped a private line. Hi! Threes about there!
Trot!"

All honour unto Bangs, for ne'er did Jones hereafter know,
By word or act official, who read off that helio;
But the tale is on the Frontier, and from Michni to Mooltan
They know the worthy General as "that most immoral man."

THE MORAL OF THE SHOW.

THE majority of the multitude who will visit the Exhibition which is to be opened by Royalty with all the solemnity and pageantry of a State ceremonial, will possibly do so from curiosity simply or in order to be amused. Sight-seers as a rule do not care to spend their money or their time on shows which they are told are intended to instruct or elevate them. They want to be pleased—not to be preached to. And so a great deal of what has been said or written regarding the moral to be drawn from the gathering together in the capital of the British Empire of exhibits of the arts, industries and resources of the Colonies and of India will have been spoken or written to little purpose. It is no doubt true that such a spectacle appeals to the patriotic instincts of every Englishman as giving ocular and tangible proofs of the vastness of that Empire, and of the growing strength and prosperity of its distant dependencies; but the ordinary Briton will accept this as a matter of fact, and will hardly trouble himself to draw any political deductions from it. He will no doubt feel naturally proud of the progress which Australia, Canada, and New Zealand are making, because they are the children of his mother-country, and this feeling may lead him to approve of Federation without very clearly understanding what it altogether means. But if the general result be to strengthen the tie of blood relationship of which so much boast has been made, the Exhibition of 1886 will be productive of one great good. England, however, has always looked upon her Colonial children with parental solicitude and regard, in spite of any occasional misunderstandings on either side.

But, it has been urged, that this Exhibition will do other good. It will cause Englishmen to take a livelier interest in India. It is time that they should do so, for the apathy which they have hitherto shown towards her is one of the strangest facts in English history. Until very lately, although it was a common saying that India was being brought daily nearer to England, yet the truth was that to most Englishmen at home India was little known or cared about. Indian topics were considered a bore in Parliament or in the Press except when some startling event happened to break for a moment the stillness of ignorance or apathy. The slowness of England's advance towards an intimate acquaintance with India cannot be denied, however much it may be regretted. In Parliament the mocking of an Indian question—unless it could be used as a party cry—was the signal for emptying the benches of either House. A stranger in the Commons on an Indian Budget night would hardly believe that the subject was one concerning the finances of an Empire. From the paucity of attendance, he would rather be led to think that honourable members were discussing the accounts of some vestry. And in the columns of the newspapers and in the talk of society India was equally relegated to the background. Parliament, Press, and Society were always ready to use the glib phrase of India being "the brightest jewel in the British Crown;" but this did not do much to stir up the apathetic or enlighten the ignorant.

The assurance to-day is that all this is changed, and that India is entering upon an era in which she will be watched with the deepest interest and with the tenderest regard of Englishmen. The magnificent display which represents the wealth, skill, and industry of the vast continent now under British sway, will startle the attention of the most thoughtless visitor. But this display is also the silent condemnation, more eloquent than words of rebuke, of the apathy and neglect under which India has been hidden from English sympathy. Why, it may well be asked, has such promise of undeveloped wealth and material progress been so little regarded? Why has India not had the chances at the hands of England which Colonies of almost yesterday have had and utilised? A hundred years ago Australia hardly contained a single British inhabitant. India then was being consolidated under British rule into an empire—but the material progress of the one how rapid, of the other how slow! And yet many years ago it was written of India that "the voice of prophecy, the experience of history, the observation of nature, all combine to point to her as furnishing the sphere of the greatest future development of power, wealth, and knowledge." It is true that we won India by the sword, and not, like Australia, by the shepherd's crook; that the earlier pages of English rule in the East disclose "sad records of energies wasted, wisdom misdirected, and military skill applied only to spread abroad desolation and ruin,"—but the dead past has buried its dead. Writing of that great "Company of English merchants trading to the East," it was said that "without a spark of patriotic feeling they set on the brow of England a gem of priceless value. The evil which they wrought has well nigh passed away; the good of which they have been the not unconscious instruments will go on multiplying for ever." These words were penned on the first anniversary of the battle of Plassey, when India was in the throes of the great Mutiny and the British power was trembling on a sword-point. To-day that power stands firm in the confidence and trust with which the Natives regard British rule. The evil done is forgotten—the good is going on. India sends to England the trophies of triumphal progress in the march of civilisation, and if England's responsibility to this long-neglected people be now recognised and admitted, the moral to be drawn from the Exhibition is one of good omen for the future relations—political, social, and commercial—between her and her Eastern Empire.

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.

The arrangements for the opening of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition by Her Majesty the Queen, on Tuesday, May 4th, have now been definitely made, and will be found to be in the main as follows:—Her Majesty the Queen will leave Windsor Castle and will travel by the Great Western Railway to Paddington Station, and will then proceed through Hyde Park to the principal entrance of the Exhibition in Exhibition Road, escorted by the Life Guards. On the arrival of Her Majesty at the Exhibition, a flourish of trumpets will be given by Her Majesty's State Trumpeters, and the Queen will be received by his Royal Highness the Executive President of the Royal Commission, and members of the Royal Family.

A procession will then be formed, and will proceed through the Exhibition to the Royal Albert Hall. On arriving at the dais in the Hall, an address will be presented to Her Majesty by his Royal Highness, to which Her Majesty will return an answer handed to her by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and will command the Lord Chamberlain to declare "the Exhibition open," which will be announced to the public by a flourish of trumpets by Her Majesty's State Trumpeters stationed in the Hall, and by the firing of a Royal Salute in Hyde Park. The Archbishop of Canterbury will then offer up a Prayer, and the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society will sing the "Hallelujah Chorus." An Ode specially written by Lord Tennyson, and set to music by Sir Arthur Sullivan, will be sung by Madame Albani and the Choir, under the direction of the composer. Madame Albani will then sing "Home, Sweet Home," and the Queen will then leave the Exhibition by the Royal entrance of the Albert Hall, accompanied by the members of the Royal Family and the members of the Household in attendance. As Her Majesty leaves the building "Rule Britannia" will be sung by the Choir, under the direction of Mr. Barnby. Guards of Honour of the Coldstream Guards and of the Grenadier Guards will be mounted at the main entrance of the Exhibition and the Royal entrance of the Albert Hall respectively. The Honourable Corps of the Yeomen of the Guard will be on duty at the Albert Hall and in the Exhibition buildings.

After a careful consultation with the Agents-General of the Colonies, the Reception Committee have adopted a classification of the visitors who may be expected to come within the range of their operations, and for whose benefit accordingly special excursions are being arranged. Besides a limited number of representatives of the different Executive Commissions, the classification includes:—Colonial Governors, Ministers and ex-Ministers, Members of the Legislatures, Mayors of Cities, Heads of Government Departments, Secretaries to the High Commissioner and Agents-General, Judges of the Higher Courts of Justice, Officers in the Colonial Forces, who have held the command down to, and including the rank of, Lieutenant-Colonel, Presidents of Railway Companies, Principals of Railway Companies, Principals of Universities, Prelates and Heads of Religious Denominations, Widows of ex-Governors and Administrators of Governments. The wives and daughters of those visitors who are comprised in the above list will be considered as being included in the classification. The names of distinguished visitors from the Colonies not included in any of the above classes will be added to the Committee's list on the recommendation of the Agents-General, and as the arrangements of the Committee permit.

In addition to the programme of the opening to-morrow as published, Sir G. H. Chubb will present Her Majesty with a master-key in gold which will open every department, although the locks exceed 500 in number. This key is adorned with turquoises, rubies, and emeralds, the former being chiefly disposed around the barrel of the key. The handle of the key springs from several elephants' heads, and is itself in blue enamel, on which in escut-cheons round the stern face of a British lion are the heads of animals representing the Colonies and dependencies—the beaver for Canada, the sheep for the Cape and Natal, the kangaroo for the antipodes, the ox for New Zealand, the tiger for Ceylon, and the elephant for India. Mr. Clowes will present a beautifully bound copy of the catalogue, and Mr. A. J. R. Trendell, the ever-courteous and indefatigable literary superintendent, will also offer to Her Majesty a descriptive volume which he has already prepared.

Inspection by the Prince of Wales.—On Saturday afternoon the Prince of Wales visited the Exhibition for the purpose of personally inspecting the condition of the various Courts and noting the arrangements for the reception of Her Majesty to-morrow. The visits of the Prince have lately been exceedingly frequent, but as this visit bore a semi-official character considerable interest was evinced, and his arrival was awaited with much expectation by a large number of persons employed in and about the Exhibition. After visiting the various Colonial and West India Courts his Royal Highness entered the Durbar Hall, where he passed in review some forty Native Indians, who were presented to his notice by Dr. Tyler, F.R.C.S., who has these people in charge. The Natives, clad in their own peculiar clothing, formed a semi-circle, and saluted to the ground before the Prince, who addressed them through Dr. Tyler as interpreter. His Royal Highness said: "I am very pleased to see you here, and I hope you will, during your visit, enjoy health and feel happy. I remember well my memorable visit to India, which was a great source of pleasure to me, and the happy days I spent there among you have left a deep impression upon me. I thank you for coming here and the reception you have given me." Shahban, a gold embroidery weaver, from Benares, who only works for Native princes, then stepped forward, and, in the name of all the different castes, said: "May Heaven's blessings be poured upon you. We are your slaves." The Prince appeared very pleased, and the Natives in their turn evinced by pronounced salaams their appreciation of the honour conferred. Having inspected the courtyard in which these people are to ply their trades, which is now quite complete, the Prince entered the Economic Court, and glanced at the fine collection of ethnographical and commercial objects there gathered together. He then returned to the main gallery, and so up the steps, through the Indian Hall, where he inspected the gorgeous draperies of carpets and Indian materials, together with the life-like models of the various arms of the Indian Service. In each Court visited, his Royal Highness allowed the Commissioner responsible to be presented to him, and in this way he made the acquaintance of all the prominent officials of the forthcoming Exhibition.

THE PUNJAB UNIVERSITY.

The Punjab Government has recorded a long resolution on the affairs of the Punjab University, "which for some time past have been a cause of great anxiety." A table giving the financial history of the University down to the present time, with a forecast down to the end of the current year, shows a deficit of Rs. 13,648 in 1883, a deficit of Rs. 7,110 for 1884, a surplus of Rs. 3,997 for 1885, and an anticipated deficit again of Rs. 3,986 for 1886. Sir Charles Aitchison remarks that it becomes the imperative duty, not only of the Senate, but of Government to ascertain carefully the causes to which this condition of things is traceable, and the heads of account under which the income can be improved, or the expenditure diminished. His Honour accordingly announces the intention of the Government "to apply, without flinching, such remedies as the circumstances of the case require." In the Government's opinion the financial embarrassments of the University are entirely due to inordinate expenditure in the Oriental Department; and "the whole question of expenditure in the Oriental College and school must be investigated and dealt with in a more thorough and systematic manner than has yet been done." It seems to the Lieutenant-Governor "nothing short of a scandal not only that so enormous and costly a staff should be employed with so infinitesimal a return in the shape of fees, but that there should be in the Oriental College and school so large an annual expenditure on purely charitable stipends, and that stipends or scholarships should, in some instances, have been drawn by the same person for eight, ten, and even fourteen years." The resolution is published in the Punjab Gazette.

BOMBAY may well be proud—she now possesses a hydraulic lift which can take and raise clean out of the water vessels 400 feet in length and weighing 9,000 tons. To do this, and replace the ship in its natural element, only consumes three-quarters of an hour! In this matter it is believed the western capital of India takes the lead of Great Britain.

CAPTAIN A. G. H. GARDNER, 2nd Battalion Cheshire Regiment, a probationer for the Army Pay Department, having passed his final examination, has been appointed paymaster, and posted to the 1st Battalion South Yorkshire Regiment at Dinapore.

AN ANGLO-INDIAN DIRECTOR.—A gentleman who had served nearly thirty years in the Indian Civil Service, came home with his well-earned income of one thousand a-year and a few thousands at his banker's. His children were grown up and well settled in life. He had no expensive habits ; and beyond an occasional game at whist, limited to sixpenny points, and perhaps half-a-crown on the rubber, he never staked money in playing or betting. He took chambers in the West-end, was a member of the Oriental and other clubs, and settled down apparently to pass a comfortable, uneventful life, until summoned to go over to the majority. For a time all went quietly and well with him ; but, like most Englishmen, he found it hard to live without work, and time was very heavy on his hands. While in this frame of mind, he, very unfortunately for him, as it turned out, met an old Indian friend, a retired military officer, who believed himself to be making a fortune in joint-stock companies. As was to be expected, this old friend took him into the City and introduced him to some so-called City men, individuals whose right to such a title would certainly be repudiated by members of the Stock Exchange, or by those engaged in any legitimate City business. Very few days after these introductions he was asked by a financial agent if he would accept a seat at the board of a company that was about to be floated. The terms to be two hundred pounds a-year, paid him as a director, and fifty fully paid-up shares of ten pounds each. He agreed willingly enough ; and a day or two later his name appeared in all the leading London papers in which the new company was advertised. From that day the Anglo-Indian may be said to have entered on a new career. In six months he had become director in as many companies. He went daily to the City, where he remained till the tide of busy men turned westward, and then went home with the comfortable conviction that he had made money and gained valuable information on financial matters. Matters went on pleasantly enough for a time ; but at last a very decided change for the worse came. One by one the companies of which he was a director collapsed ; and when they were wound up, our friend found, to his dismay, that he had to book up the full value of the shares for which he had never paid. This pretty nearly cleared away the ready money he had at his banker's ; but there was still worse behind. Promoters of companies and others whose business it is to finance without funds, have a friendly way of helping each other when pecuniary difficulties arise. Whether they want money to push on new some scheme, or whether only a much milder sum is required for daily expenses, they rarely refuse to put their name to stamped paper for each other. "Help me, and I'll help thee," is held to be one of the standing articles of their social creed. And when a fairly well-to-do "guinea-pig" becomes more or less intimate with these gentlemen, he is generally asked to join one or more of them in raising money by means of bills. Sometimes these useful substitutes for capital may be paid at maturity ; but more often they are not met, and are replaced by similar documents. There are, however, occasions on which renewal of financial obligations is no longer possible, and when those who draw, or those who accept, have to book up without delay. Such was the lot of our friend whose short financial career is here briefly described. His name being no longer regarded as valuable, he was called on to find the funds for which he had made himself answerable. He was, of course, made a bankrupt, and four-fifths of his pension was awarded to his creditors. To live on two hundred pounds a year is by no means an easy task to one who has never known the want of money ; he dragged on a miserable existence for a couple of years, and then died from what might almost be called called a broken heart.—Chambers's Journal.

MAJOR E. R. ELLES, R.A., has been appointed Assistant Quarter-master-General.

DEPUTY SURGEON-GENERAL R. WOLSELEY, M.D., Medical Staff, has been placed on the administrative staff of the army, vice Deputy Surgeon-General W. M. Webb, whose tour of service in India has expired.

SURGEONS David Aikman Patterson, M.D., James Sutherland Wilkins and William Alexander Barren have been promoted to surgeon-majors.

CAPTAIN B. R. CROZIER, 2nd Battalion Royal Scots Fusiliers, having passed the examination for the Army Pay Department, has been appointed paymaster, pending confirmation, to his own battalion, now standing at Thayetmyo and Toungoo, Burma.

THE following appointments have been made to the 2nd Battalion of the 4th Goorkhas now being raised :—Major King-Harman, 38th Bengal Infantry, to be Commandant ; Captain Nixon to be second in command ; Captain Cotton, 20th Punjab Infantry, to be wing commander ; Captain Drury and Lieutenant Showers, 17th Bengal Infantry, to be wing officers. The services of Lieutenant Carnegie, Madras Staff Corps, and Lieutenant Malcolm, Bombay Staff Corps, have been applied for, for the appointments of wing officers. Colonel Jacob succeeds Major King-Harman as second in command of the 38th Bengal Infantry.

A GAZETTEER

OF THE TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT OF THE VICEROY OF INDIA.

BY

EDWARD THORNTON.

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR ROGER LETHBRIDGE, C.I.E.
(Formerly Press Commissioner in India, &c.),

AND

ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E.,

H.M. INDIAN (HOME) SERVICE.

(Translator of the Anvár-i-Suhaili, &c.)

WHEN Thornton's "Gazetteer of India" was originally presented to the public, it was the only compilation of its kind, and it was obviously desirable that, within reasonable limits, the work should be sufficiently comprehensive to give the reader some insight into the history of the various localities enumerated. Since that date, however, Hunter's "Imperial Gazetteer" has been prepared, which is not only much more ample than its predecessor, but is still to be greatly enlarged in the New Edition now in course of production. In these circumstances it has been thought incumbent, when issuing a New Edition of Thornton's "Gazetteer" corrected up to date, to modify in some measure the plan of the work by omitting much of the detail, and giving only such leading facts and figures as will suffice for ordinary purposes of reference, a plan which has the additional advantage of reducing the work to one moderate-sized volume.

It is obvious that the value of the New Edition must depend in a large measure upon the care and judgment which have been exercised in the preparation of the letter-press. The task was, in the first instance, undertaken by Sir Roper Lethbridge, whose literary attainments and acquaintance with India were considered to qualify him to a marked degree for an undertaking demanding considerable knowledge and experience. In order, further, to render the work as complete and perfect as is possible, the Publishers deemed it prudent to subject the pages to the scrutiny of a second Editor, in the person of Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, whose lengthened experience gives to his criticism an unusual degree of weight and importance. The joint names which appear on the title-page will, it is hoped, serve as a guarantee to the public that the "Gazetteer" is in the main accurate and trustworthy, free alike from sins of omission and commission. It will be found to contain many hundreds of place not included in any former edition, while the areas and populations have been revised by the data given in the Census Report of 1881.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb,
and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to
Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals
throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public
are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE. Athenaeum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the Army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—
Address of the C.-in-C., at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—*Westminster

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGH, COLD, CATHARRH, CASTHMA, CABRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.

This warning is necessary, as many persons have been purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.—See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHLORODYNE, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their success there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, and have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DYSENTERY, NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILVAY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 89, St. Russell St., W.C.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 23rd April; from Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad to the 21st April.

THE memorandum drawn up by the Viceroy before leaving Rangoon has been published.

HIS EXCELLENCY desires that the inhabitants of Burma should clearly understand that there is no chance of a Native prince being again put on the throne.

It is also pointed out that dacoity and crimes of violence will be trampled out at any cost.

A PROSPECT is held out that some of the dacoits now in prison will be liberated when tranquillity has been restored in the country.

THE Viceroy hopes that a satisfactory understanding will be arrived at with China.

THE Chief Commissioner of Burma has issued orders that for the future no villages are to be burnt as a punishment.

EX-KING THEEBAW, accompanied by his two queens and a small suite, arrived at Rutnagherry on Friday afternoon, in the s.s. Olive.

THEY landed the following morning, and were driven to the bungalows provided for their accommodation.

BEFORE leaving Madras King Theebaw sent some gems into the bazaar, but was unable to realise his price.

Colonel Euan Smith succeeds Mr. Flowden as Resident at Oodeypore in Meywar, though he will not take up his appointment for some little time, as the state of his health has necessitated his taking immediate short leave to England.

MR. J. WOODBURN, C.S., will, it is believed, be appointed permanently to the Chief Secretaryship of the North-West Provinces when Mr. J. R. Reid relinquishes the appointment in June.

MR. PHILLIPS, the late manager of the Provincial Bank of Upper India, has been charged at the instance of the shareholders with criminal breach of trust as a banker under Section 409 of the Indian Penal Code. Bail has been refused.

Notes of the Week.

THE demand for the exhibits from India at the Exhibition is very considerable, and several thousand pounds worth of goods have already been disposed of. The management of the sale of these is under the efficient hands of Mr. J. R. Royle, as representing the Government of India, and no one connected with the Exhibition has worked harder than this able officer to secure for India the prominence and attention which are her right in this great show.

"HOBBY-HORSES" have wonderful powers of endurance. Sir Joseph Pease has been riding his opium one for many years now, and there is no sign of tiring it. The venerable animal was trotted out for his annual course through the Commons last Tuesday night with the usual result of being trotted back again into his stable. Sir Joseph brought forward again the stock arguments of missionaries and other good men regarding the wickedness of the Indian Government in its endeavour to demoralise the Chinese, but the House was not prepared to recommend the surrender of several millions sterling of Indian revenue per annum to please the saints. Sir Richard Temple may have shocked Exeter Hall a little by endorsing the first murderer's sentiment in objecting to being his Chinese brother's keeper, but he completely demolished Sir Joseph with hard and stubborn facts. Then Mr. Stafford Howard, confirming the facts by figures, made the discomfiture more crushing. So the Indian finances are saved for the present.

It is always best to be thoroughly well informed when you intend to attack an existing abuse in men or measures. That this has been the successful aim of an English journalist who has lately given some news to his readers about the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh must be apparent to all who know the facts of the case. The Maharajah is described as a bloated aristocrat, who, having married an English lady of title, has been drawing from the British tax-payer £25,000 per annum for an extraordinary number of years for no reason whatever except that it is the lot of that long-suffering beast of burden to bear such weighty cruelties uncomplainingly. This is intelligence indeed. The history of India is evidently being studied to some advantage by the teachers of the people in the radical organs.

WE may ourselves have something to say shortly regarding the case of the Maharajah, which seems to have been misunderstood in other quarters than those referred to above. We are not surprised that the Government, after the publication of his foolish manifesto to the Sikh nation, should forbid him visiting the Punjab; but it seems a pity, in the interests of the Maharajah himself, and for the good name of British justice and generosity, that some better steps were not taken to dissuade him from his purpose, and also to avoid what must now become an unpleasant scandal, for the enemies of England to divert themselves with.

A GRAVE scandal or series of scandals may soon afford food for comment in the case of the estate of the late Maharajah of Burdwan, which for a year past has been in charge of the Court of Wards. It is said that the friends of the family insist upon an inquiry being made into the vast sums of money that have been drawn from the hoards of the raj during the last six years on the plea that they were required for current expenditure or investment in Government securities; also into the amounts that are declared to have been remitted during the same period to London and to local tradesmen, with the invoices of the goods bought. The Statesman and Friend of India says that "but for the immense hoards in the vaults of the zenana it would have been impossible to save this great property from the inexorable sunset law."

THE same journal says that it is probable the Viceroy will not visit Cashmere on the occasion of the installation of the young Maharajah—an indication that His Excellency is not altogether satisfied with Cashmerian administration. For many years no administration could have been worse for the unfortunate people of the so-called "Happy Valley," but it was thought that under the enlightened management of the Dewan Lachman Dass, the old order of corruption and jobbery was passing away, and a rule more in accordance with British ideas of truth and justice taking its place. But it would appear that it is not so easy to get out of the old ways. "The Cashmeris have not got over Lord Ripon's visit yet, as it is the custom to exact the expenses attendant upon such visits from the cultivator." This is hardly correct. If the tax is fixed at say ten sheep for each village, the collector takes twenty, utilising the additional mutton for himself. But then this system of direct taxation is not confined to Cashmere only. It obtains elsewhere in India, and is considered a very simple and straightforward way of raising revenue.

THE Civil and Military Gazette is responsible for a statement which if correct may well be called "an extraordinary instance of misdirected statecraft." It is to the effect that the sale of frontier maps of every description is prohibited to British officers—even so ordinary a guide as the Himalayan Route being included in the forbidden list. As the foreign officers who lately attended the Camp of Exercise at Delhi were obligingly shown every detail of the system of defence upon the North-West Frontier, and the Russian representatives expressed themselves much gratified with the full and courteous way in which the information was accorded to them, it does seem a little strange that the Government of India should be jealous of its own officers acquiring a little knowledge on their own account. But, as the Lahore paper observes, "Occasionally our Indian Government is overtaken with a peculiar form of frontier fever, aggravated by nervous debility, and lies in a very bad way indeed." It is a pity, however, that one of the symptoms of this complaint should be a desire to prevent its frontier officers knowing anything about the frontier. Surely it must have been an enemy who hath written this?

WE regret to hear that Mr. W. G. Pedder, so well and widely known as the able Secretary of the Revenue, Statistics, and Commerce Department of the India Office, is much out of health. On the other hand, it is gratifying to find that Mr. Henry Waterfield, the no less talented Financial Secretary, who has been absent for some weeks on sick leave, has resumed his duties.

LORD WILLIAM BRESFORD has given notice to the Calcutta Turf Club, that with reference to the proposal regarding jockeys being prevented from betting, either directly or indirectly, becoming law, he will at the next meeting of the Club propose:—"That in the event of jockeys being found, either directly or indirectly, betting with the bookmakers, the latter shall be made to forfeit the whole of the money they may have deposited as a security to enable them to bet in the enclosures at race meetings."

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)

(Times Correspondents.)

We have received from the Indian Office the following:—

"From Viceroy, May 5.

"Bernard reports great fire in Mandalay outside city. No lives lost. Relief works have been opened to enable sufferers to earn food.

CALCUTTA, May 3.

The Appellate Bench of the Bombay High Court has affirmed on all points Justice Scott's decision in favour of a son's claim, to enforce partition of family property during the father's lifetime, brought against the Hindoo millionaire, Sir Munguldass Nuthoo-bhoy, by his son. Many similar claims are awaiting the result.

This appeal case has excited much attention as having an important effect on Hindoo society, and formed the subject of a leading article in the Times last year.

MANDALAY, MAY 9.

No serious incendiary fire has occurred since the 30th of April, but several attempts have been made to kindle such fires. The people are excited, as notices are posted in the Bazaar announcing the early destruction of the city by fire. The country continues in a very disturbed state, and numerous arrests have been made. The present system of surrounding a village and arresting all the men found in it, while it crowds the prisons, does not tend to pacify the country.

On the 7th inst. I had an interview at the Eastern Monastery with the Thathanabaing, or Buddhist Archbishop. He referred to the condition of the country, and especially to the system of wholesale arrests. The Archbishop, who is a man of much learning and of liberal ideas, has sent his three nephews to the school of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, opened here by the Rev. Mr. Colbeck.

I asked the Archbishop to tell me freely what he thought of the present state of the country. The Thathanabaing seemed pleased at being asked his opinion, and despite repeated muttered cautions from his immediate subordinate, the prior of the monastery, he spoke as follows, in presence of a large number of monks:—

"This is now British territory. We know it well—the fact we cannot deny. The English have taken the city and the country by force of arms. It was very easy for them to do so. They captured all, without any difficulty, at their first advance.

"But since then difficulties have arisen on every side. Although the British have possession of the city and country, they are not ruling. They have not conquered the country and people. I have no fault to find with the British authorities in the matter of religion. They do not oppress us, but allow us to follow our own customs without hindrance.

"There is one thing I wish particularly to bring to your notice—that is, the treatment of Burmese villagers by the British troops. It is impossible for the Government to keep rulers in the small villages, and the dacoits, of course, cannot rule even a small village. So the result is that the poor villagers are between two—the soldiers and the dacoits. The dacoits enter a village without asking permission. They stay as long as they like; they take bullocks, food, and money forcibly, and then leave. In a short time the soldiers, having received information that dacoits are in the village and that messengers have been going to the Princes from the village, march upon the place, arrest a number of the people, and perhaps burn the village.

"Thus honest, quiet traders and villagers suffer from both sides, and are unable to resist either. I wish the military would use more discrimination. Because of their falling into danger from both sides, trade and work have greatly failed, as the people feel no security. They are irritated by the treatment which they receive from the military."

The Thathanabaing, as I took leave, said:—

"I may have said too much; I may have gone over the bounds of caution; but all I have said has been said solely out of a desire to do good to the poor and suffering people of Burma."

Some excitement has been caused by the arrest in Rangoon, on a charge of complicity in the insurrectionary movement at Henzadali, of Kooungbah, the wealthiest Burmese merchant in Mandalay. He was for many years the confidential broker to the Bombay and Burma Company. It is an open secret that through him was obtained the greater portion of the information by which the French intrigues were detected. Kooungbah has hitherto been known as the leading supporter of the English Raj. A general belief of his innocence is entertained; and the arrest is considered very injudicious, as it is almost equivalent to declaring that no reliance can be placed on any Burman.

The survey for the railway from Mandalay to Tounghoo has been commenced. Mr. Robert Gordon, an engineer well known in the province, has been selected by the Government for the work, and has left for Kyouksai.

A force accompanied by Mr. Colquhoun has defeated the insurgents near Sodoung, to the north of Tsagain, capturing two chiefs.

Four hundred men of the Prince Albert's (Somersetshire Light Infantry) and the Hampshire Regiment arrived on the 7th inst. The troops are suffering from excessive heat. Reinforcements are being sent to Bhamo.

SIMLA, MAY 8.

The Gazette of India published an announcement stating that under the statute 21 and 22 Victoria, cap. 106, the sovereign rights over the territory of Upper Burma are vested in the Queen.

CALCUTTA, MAY 9.

It will be remembered that Sir A. Colvin in his Budget speech, two months ago, dwelt at great length on the pressing importance to India of the silver question, and expressed a hope that the English Government would try to arrive at some solution of the difficulty by means of an international agreement. That the words then uttered have found an echo throughout the country is evident from the fact that the entire Indian Press is almost daily discussing the subject, being all but unanimous in favour of bimetallicism. A still stronger proof of the interest which the subject excites is to be found in the formation at various places of "Silver Associations." The most important of these was lately founded at Simla. It has Mr. Justice Cunningham as president, while among the executive committee are Mr. Barbour, Financial Secretary to the Government, Mr. Westland, Comptroller-General of Accounts, and several other high officials. Its prospectus traces the depreciation of silver to the abandonment of bimetallicism by France in 1874, and asserts that the remedy lies in a return to the double standard by international agreement. The objects of the association are to promote the intelligent discussion of the question, to dispel popular fallacies, to enlighten public opinion, and to bring it to bear upon the application of the only true remedy. Branch associations are being formed at various other places, even at remote stations like Quetta; and there seems to be every prospect that a vigorous effort will be made to arouse general interest in the question and to apply strong pressure to the Ministry.

The Madras High Court was occupied last week in trying a case which has caused great excitement in the Southern Presidency. Mr. Garstin, Secretary to the local Government, while travelling some months ago was attacked by a band of dacoits. It was stated that the dacoity had been got up by some native friends of another European official, who was on bad terms with Mr. Garstin. The trial of the case was removed from the district to the High Court, and the interest in it was further increased by a statement that the Madras Government had made a representation on the subject to the Secretary of State, and by the belief that the full details of a grave official scandal were about to transpire. A telegram announces that after a nine days' trial the case ended yesterday. The jury acquitted all the prisoners on all counts of the indictment, a result which was received with loud applause in a crowded court.

At a meeting of the Legislative Council on Thursday Mr. Ilbert introduced a Bill to remodel the Indian bankruptcy law. The draft Bill, which is founded upon the English statute of 1883, has been modified in several important particulars. Thus the proposal to abolish imprisonment for debt has been abandoned at the suggestion of the Bombay Chamber of Commerce, which considered the protection which it affords to the creditor too valuable to be sacrificed. Again, the principle of managing bankrupt estates by an official, and not a private agency, which has hitherto been the practice in this country, will be maintained, except in rare instances.

A selected team of Indian Volunteers will start in a few days for the purpose of taking part in the Wimbledon meeting. It will be commanded by one of the most ardent supporters of the Volunteer movement in this country, Lieutenant-Colonel Rivett-Carnac, of the Ghazipore Battalion.

Owing to the severe and continued drought, the news from the Bengal tea and indigo districts is far from satisfactory. Some rain has fallen in Darjeeling, but much more is wanted. Assam and Cachar have been more fortunate, but there, too, the rainfall is not enough to meet all requirements. There has been an almost unbroken drought in the indigo districts, and the spring sowings have been dried up in many places, but the October plant continues in fair condition.

The Maharajah of Cashmere is to be installed to-morrow with great ceremony.

CALCUTTA, May 9.

It is now settled that the Tibet Mission will be composed as follows:—Mr. Macaulay, Envoy; Mr. Paul, secretary; Colonel Tanner, surveyor; Dr. Lecky, medical officer; Dr. Oldham, geologist; Dr. Cunningham, naturalist; Captain Gwatkin, commanding the escort; Mr. Warry, of the Consular Service in China, interpreter; Captain Elwes, and Baboo Strut Chunder Doss, of the Bengal Educational Service, a gentleman who has already made an adventurous journey to Lhasa.

A number of mules which accompanied the Indian contingent to Egypt and have lately returned thence are now being sent to Darjeeling to furnish transport for the expedition. It is expected that the members of the party will leave Darjeeling about the end of the month, and march by the Jelep Pass to the frontiers of Tibet, which they should reach about the tenth day. It is thence five days' journey to Phari; another week should take them to Gyangze, and if all goes well they may expect to arrive at Lhasa about five weeks after their departure.

The Mission excites considerable interest in India, and some little opposition on the part of certain native newspapers. The reasons assigned for that opposition are generally frivolous, as in the case of one journal, which gravely asserts that a number of Rishis, or Hindoo hermits, have taken up their abode in caves among the recesses of the inner Himalayas, and will be disturbed in their pious meditations by the passing of a party of rude Europeans.

INDIAN PRESS.

THE SOCIAL PROGRESS OF INDIA AND "HOW NOT TO DO IT."

(Pioneer.)

In some of the London papers by the last mail, though by no means in all, we find a report of a meeting held at Willis's Rooms on the 15th March by the "National Indian Association."

What does the National Indian Association do to justify its existence? Now let us not be supposed to wish that existence extinguished. A man who would want to crush the National Indian Association would be capable of stamping deliberately on a daisy or a buttercup. At the recent meeting Mr. T. Thornton, C.S.I., explained that the life and soul of the Association, its main-spring, the person who did all the work, and, so to speak, constituted the Association in its workaday aspect, was the honorary secretary, Miss E. A. Manning. And nothing can be more entirely praiseworthy than the spirit in which Miss Manning is reported to exert herself for the benefit of Indian residents in London, giving them introductions to her friends and cards of invitation for the soirées of the Association at hired rooms in town. Again, nothing can be more admirable than the sentiments expressed by the Association (of which she is the life and soul) on the subject of female culture in India. How sad it is that the women of India are so ignorant, as a rule, and how nice it would be if they were all endowed with high education and liberal views. But still can any one lady, however meritorious, however energetic, and supported by several hundred subscribers at ten shillings a year, go a long way towards realising the grand abstractions set forth in the programme of the Association? The answer would perhaps be that she does not stand alone; that nobody in London stands less alone; that her Association has for its patroness the Princess of Wales, for its vice-patron and patronesses the Earl and Countess of Dufferin, the Marquis and Marchioness of Ripon, the Countess of Lytton, Lord Northbrook, besides many other noble persons and Highnesses of India. Then it has Lord Hobhouse for its president, and eighteen vice-presidents almost all titled, lettered, renowned in Indian administration, and including among the number Sir Richard Temple, Bart., M.P., G.C.S.I. Stars of hardly lesser magnitude shine in the firmament of the Association's council. Here we count forty names including those of Mr. Wilfrid Blunt, Sir Roper Lethbridge, Sir Monier Williams, and Mr. T. H. Thornton. But what do all these eminent persons—this happy family of uncongenial celebrities, united for once in fraternal bonds by the magic sympathies of Miss Manning's Association—what do they do to help her in drawing India and England closer together, and in promoting friendly intercourse between English people and "the people" of India. (The whole 252 millions, it would seem, by-the-by, are embraced by the catholic sympathies of the Association.) There is the grand and stupendous puzzle of the whole situation. Let us see if anything can be learned from the proceedings at the meeting of March 15th in Willis's Rooms.

The Duke of Connaught on this occasion was in the chair. An Association which unites a sufficient number of great people to begin with—even though by nothing more than the intangible paper tie of a prospectus—can roll through the fashionable world like a snowball and gather up as many more as it likes. On his right sat a Radical peer, Lord Hobhouse; on his left a Tory peer, the Earl of Idlesleigh. Most Anglo-Indian celebrities floating about London for the moment had been caught in Miss Manning's gossamer net like so many butterflies and pinned upon the platform. And the room—the big banqueting room at Willis's—was filled with people. The Tory Earl began the proceedings, and he said it was a beautiful thing to do—to draw together the bonds which united the people of India and the people of England. It was very desirable the people of England should know more about India, and it was very desirable the people of India should know more about England. A man does not go on being Sir Stafford Northcote all his life without being able to develop those two ideas into a half-hour speech. The noble Earl did so and sat down. Then Mr. T. H. Thornton, the lost glory of the Punjab, had his half hour, the last part of which, if knocking on the floor with umbrellas told any tales, was a mauvais quart d'heure for the audience. He eulogised the great orator who had preceded him; he took some minutes to explain, with the help of an allegory, about a small sailing vessel and a P. and O. steamer, that he was a lesser person than the Earl of Idlesleigh; but, as time wore on, he also reached the core and marrow of the business before him, and pointed out what a beautiful task it was for an association to undertake—that of drawing closer the bonds, &c., and making India better known to England, and England better known to India. Mr. Thornton wandered a little afterwards, and got entangled with remarks concerning the influence of an Asiatic home. Of course, the first duty of an orator swimming with the stream is to praise everything that he refers to—so Mr. Thornton thought that there was a great deal that was very excellent in the influences of the Asiatic home. But still these might be rendered even more excellent by the education of the Asiatic home—so it was a beautiful thing to sympathise with the aspiration that the Asiatic home—as embodied in the women of India—should be educated. Then, Sir Monier Williams had an innings, and explained that he was a humble person as compared with his Royal Highness the Royal Chairman. But still, though there was no royal road to learning, the Royal Duke (their Royal Chairman) had studied Hindustani when in India like any ordinary person, and, if he might divulge the fact without impertinence, had written exercises. It was historically on record that another Royal person, Queen Elizabeth, had learned Latin, and some of her Royal exercises were at the Bodleian Library at Oxford. All of which brought him round to the point that he was himself—though not a royal personage like his Royal Highness their Royal Chairman—a person specially identified with the idea of drawing closer the bonds that united the people of India with the people of England, and which had this further remarkable and enchanting characteristic that they also united the people of England with the people of India. And so the long-suffering audience was dragged through bog after bog of platitudes—not without emitting symptoms of impatience we understand—till at last, to wind up the proceedings, the “Royal Chairman” bore his testimony, too, to the virtues of the drawing-together process, and explained that the Duchess of Connaught, when in India, had gone about a good deal among the ladies of India, and had been much distressed by the ignorance which she found to prevail in those circles. So he was glad to take the first opportunity that offered on his return to England for identifying himself with the noble objects and aims which the Association had in view. At last the audience, which had leaked a good deal as the speeches proceeded, was granted a blessed release; and the good people who had gathered together must have felt that, admirable as the work of the Association might be, it was a heavy strain on flesh and blood to sit out an exposition of its large though indefinite utility, and that the bonds so often talked about required apparently a great deal of hauling upon before they could be drawn together in the manner universally recognised as so desirable.

Certainly, the willing assemblage of a large audience in honour of professions, however empty of sympathy with, or interest in, India is a satisfactory sign of the times. It shows that there is plenty of public force at home ready to harness itself to any undertaking that might really promise to do good to India, and strengthen the cordiality of British relations with the country. But one cannot help wishing that it should be expended in some better way than in nerving a great hall full of persons to endure the intellectual sufferings involved in listening to such speeches as those we have briefly described. Evening parties may be good things, tea and coffee have their merits, and a monthly magazine may or may not be readable; but speeches are inevitably a nuisance unless speakers have something to say. The National Indian Association has nothing to do with politics, has nothing to do with religion, nor with any movements about which conflicts of opinion may arise. Then it ought to have nothing whatever to do with speeches and meetings, for all such persons as are willing to come forward and blow oratorical soap bubbles on a platform dedicated to a few glittering generalities will almost inevitably resemble the bird in Tennyson's “Island,” whose compass was but of a single note that it makes one weary to hear.

KARACHI HARBOUR WORKS.

(Sind Gazette.)

The whole future of Karachi appears to turn upon the use made of their opportunities by the mercantile community, upon its enterprise in point of fact. On the one hand we see that the expansion of trade is outgrowing the facilities for it, on the other that there is hardly to be found a more rapid mode, or a more boundless prospect of making money than by the construction of the pre-eminently reproductive works of docks and wharves. If we take these two sets of circumstances together we confess that it is with some astonishment that we learn that there is danger of the all-important expansion of the trade of this port being checked by want of capital to work out the necessary, nay, indispensable, improvements, that the harbour works cannot be carried on without the assistance of Government by loans, and that private enterprise in Karachi cannot undertake one of the most lucrative businesses ever offered to investors. That money must be forthcoming before money can be made is obvious enough. But the same resources which have turned the fishing village of forty years ago into the Karachi port of to-day are not, surely, less available now than they have been any year since Sind was annexed. Banks, we are told, will not advance money for such purposes as we are now contemplating because the locking up of the capital is incompatible with their special business. Merchants and shipowners will not lay out money in this way because, we are told, they can make their profits fast enough in the handling of their cargoes in the present rough way—by means of lighters and native boats—without wharves and quays. And so things go on from day to day. Government seems to be in no hurry. Their assistance is contingent on the formation of a Port Trust, the draft bill for which was, we are informed, before Council in October last, but which does not appear to have made progress since.

NATIVE STUDENTS IN INDIA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The Bengal students at the Orlamcester Agricultural College are starting the usual complaints of there being no opening for them when they return to India; that is to say, the Bengal Government is not prepared to find comfortable berths for all those whom its liberality enables to study agriculture under the most favourable conditions. The complaint is, of course, only one phase of the never-varying idea that education is but a means to Government employ. Hundreds of youths pass the middle-class examination every year, and immediately set to work to pester every official, with any patronage to bestow, for employment. The only argument that may be fairly used in their behalf is that, as they have received a special form of education provided for them by a beneficent Government—which education, however, in the real acceptance of the term according to Native ideas, is no education at all—it is the further duty of the Government to support its own bantlings. Nothing could, of course, be more unreasonable. At the same time, while Government has laid down a hard-and-fast rule that Government employment should be given to none but those who have passed a certain educational standard—the middle-class examination—it is, on the other hand, impossible to find employment for all who do pass that standard. It is, therefore, worthy of consideration whether a more liberal scheme of education might not be adopted. Not only should it be impossible for a lad just to scrape through an examination, and use the certificate thereby obtained to worry officials, but a youth should also be enabled to take his place as properly educated amongst his fellow-countrymen, who have not degraded themselves by passing examinations. Every official must have met with instances, when he was compelled by a Procrustean rule, to reject candidates for employment, thoroughly well educated though they might be in the Indian classics, of gentlemanly manners and respectable parentage (especially amongst the Mahomedan community). At the recent Nauchandi Fair at Meerut a meeting was held of the whole educational staff, and resolutions were passed by the schoolmasters themselves praying for a relaxation of the rule and permission to reach the Indian classics as well as the curriculum laid down by the Educational Department. Surely the object of a State system of education should be to give the people what they want. If they want to learn the Mahajani character instead of the Deva-nagiri, teach it them; if they wish to learn Persian classics, as well as the trumpery history of “Sandford and Merton” in Urdu, let them do so. Under the present system the student who wishes to avoid the stigma of being a mere place-hunter has to go through two educational courses—one that of the Government, the other that of the home classics. The shoals of unmedwars who make a district officer's life a burden to him after the results of the annual middle-class examination are given out are a scandal to the English administration.

“A SUFFERER” writes from Ootacamund:—“I see in an article of the Madras Mail of the 5th inst., headed ‘Better than a Gold Mine,’ notice made of the Government Cinchona Plantations on the Nilgiris, in which it is represented that the Government has been virtually recouped for its whole investment; and also stating that it is misdirected energy to diligently increase the plantations, as it checks private enterprise. How true this statement is can scarcely be credited until one has gone over a few of the Cinchona plantations on the Nilgiris, when it becomes quite an eyesore to see the state of semi-abandonment a great number of the estates are in, only caused by over-production. If, however, the Government had only kept to its original intention of introducing the Cinchona plant, and then letting private individuals cultivate it, the difference in private estates would be wonderful. Instead of a number of the planters now cursing the plant and its introduction the Government would probably have been able to let much more land, and so indirectly received as good or better income; besides which there would always have been the satisfaction of knowing it had done only what it originally said it would do. So much, however, has already appeared in your columns on this subject without any notice being taken that one feels it quite useless to say more.”

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE HISTORY OF INDIA.*

This valuable and important work was, in the first instance, projected by the late Sir Henry Miers Elliot, as a kind of sequel to his book on the "Mahomedan Historians of India;" his intention being to give "an account of the historians of the independent Mahomedan Monarchies, such as Gujarát, Bengál, Kashmir, and others." But Sir Henry's modesty took alarm at the voluminous extent of the work which he had already published: and it was after his death left to the late Mr. Edward Thomas to obtain from the Home Government of India the means of giving effect to the wishes of the deceased statesman. Mr. Thomas has joined the majority; and Sir E. C. Bayley, who, possessing abilities for the task of which few indeed can boast, undertook the labour of re-casting the work by the light of MSS. acquired since the decease of Sir H. Elliot, has also departed from this transitory world. The work has, therefore, been introduced to the public under the auspices of an Oriental scholar than whom none is more competent, one who modestly veils his identity under the initials "H. Y.," and his share in the work performed in the words, "This volume has been completed and passed though the Press since Sir Edward [Bayley's] lamented death, and allowance must be made for the absence of various touches which would doubtless have come from his hand." The book, indeed, might, as is frankly acknowledged, never have appeared at all, but for the "joint liberality of the Secretary of State for India, and of Messrs. Allen and Co."

Gujarát, now known chiefly as the ancient name of a great part of the Bombay Presidency, was, as the map contained in the volume shows, at one time a dominion of enormous magnitude, extending from Jodhpoor over the larger portion of the west of India, and possessing a revenue amounting to the great sum of "five arbs, eighty-four krors, and fifty lakhs of Rupees," or in our money, about five hundred and eighty-four millions of pounds sterling. Most of its provinces were fertile, and it possessed a long stretch of seaboard, including the coast of Sind, that of Kutch, and that of the Peninsula to the neighbourhood of Goa. It was a saying of the Delhi Sultan, Sikander Bahlól, that whereas "the support of the throne of Delhi is wheat and jowár, the foundation of the realm of Gujarát is coral and pearls, for there are eighty-four ports under the throne of Gujarát" (p. 20).

It may well be supposed that historians would not be lacking to narrate the events which led to the foundation of so considerable an empire. The notes of two annalists especially have been translated, and in parts abbreviated, in order to form the text of the present work. The first of these is the Mirat-i Ahurdi of Ali Muhamad Khan, who was Diwan of Gujarát towards the close of the reign of Muhamad Shah, and who began in A.D. 1161 to compile a return of the revenue of the Subah. To this writer we are indebted for statistical details of great value, and for a general account of Gujarát and of its earlier history. His statements regarding the Hindu dynasties which reigned in the country are rejected, as untrustworthy, by the editor. His notice of the Muhamadan period is, too, considered unequal; but, it is added, "with some illustration from other sources it affords a fair sketch of events in Gujarát under the Delhi kings."

A very different, and far more trustworthy writer was the author, Sikandar bin Muhamad, of the Mirat-i Sikandari, which takes its name from him, and from which the greater part of this work has been translated. His narrative, as here reproduced, though not in strictness contemporary with the events narrated, was all but so, he having been born in the year of Mahmud III.'s death, which brings the present volume to a somewhat abrupt close. The chronicler was closely connected with the Bukhari Saids (Syeds), and this circumstance has affected—one can hardly say unfavourably—the tone of his writings, which are filled with stories of miracles performed by them, the dry bones of history being, to the advantage of the general reader, clothed in anecdote. Complaining of the partiality of previous annalists, whom he enumerates, for the kings whose chroniclers they were, Sikandar, while writing from a strictly Mahomedan point of view, is considered by his distinguished translator "not only an impartial, but a very skilful, writer; he endeavours to show how the individual disposition of each monarch affected the prosperity of the kingdom, and, moreover, to illustrate each monarch's character by anecdotes and well-chosen remarks." This favourable criticism is amply justified by a perusal of his narrative, which is obviously meant to be truthful. He shows, however, in the case of Mahmud Shah Bigarha, the partiality which he reprehends in others.

This monarch is admitted by all to have been "the most famous of all the local Kings; the glory of his name lives, indeed, enshrined in native tradition throughout the whole of India as a model Sovereign and pious Musulman." Thus far the commentator (p. 62); hear we now the annalist himself. The population prospered. "Certain experts of his ministers made (p. 167) an inquiry into the state of the resources of the country; in some cases they found an increase of tenfold, in no village was it less than two or threefold. Traders were contented, because traffic on the roads was perfectly safe and secure. . . . Ministers of religion were satisfied, because the Sultan was their disciple and devoted follower. . . . Fine sarais and inns were built for the accommodation of travellers, and splendid colleges and mosques were raised. . . . It is said that during his reign corn never rose to a high price; everything was cheap during his rule—the people of Gujarát never saw such cheapness again. . . . What a glorious age was that of Sultán Mahmúd!"

This great ruler's treatment of jagirs was not one of picking holes and finding flaws in titles; but was that of a wise and far-seeing statesman. We read (p. 167), "A rule was established by the Sultan that if an amir or any soldier was killed in battle or died a natural died, his jagir was confirmed to his son; if there was no son, half the jagir was given to the daughter. And if there was no daughter, a suitable provision was settled on the dependents, that there might be no ground of complaint. It is said that a person once told the King that the son of a deceased amir was not worthy of his position. The King answered, 'The position will make him worthy!' No one ever made such a remark again."

This policy would appear to have been throughout followed by his successor, Sultan Muzaffar II. Both were free from that pettifogging attorney spirit which too often animated our own resumption commissions,—under whatever name they may have been appointed.

We have no design to inflict on our readers an abstract of the somewhat perplexing history of Gujarát. It would be impossible, even did our limits permit, to compress the facts without destroying the clearness of the narrative, which, considering the somewhat bewildering recurrence of the same names (or, more frequently, titles) is entitled to the praise that it is wonderfully perspicuous, and invests with a certain interest, even for others but professed students, what might easily have been a very unattractive congeries of detail.

It is hardly possible, without an inspection of the originals, to appreciate the labour involved in comparing and annotating them. The test of the pudding is said to lie in the eating thereof, and, thus tried, the result is eminently satisfactory. Of the translation it is difficult to speak too highly. It faithfully represents the peculiar styles of the various writers, whose works are utilised, and is written not only in good—that is a matter of course with such a translator—but in nervous, idiomatic, English.

HEROIC TALES.*

Of the six great Epics of the world one belongs to Persia, whose national traditions are embodied in the "Shah Namah"—(the Gallic transliteration nameh)—is designedly rejected; a work well nigh unknown even in name to the world at large in the Western Hemisphere. The cause of this ignorance is not far to seek. The inordinate length of the composition—60,000 verses—has rendered its publication in English a matter of impossibility, and the days are gone by when good old "John Company" gave liberal subsidies towards the cost of producing Oriental works which could not otherwise see the light of day. The French, more generous in their treatment of men of learning, possess the only complete rendering of the "Book of Kings" into an European tongue in the shape of the valuable and delightful version produced by Professor Jules Mohl. The neglect thus shown of an immortal Epic seems to have stung Miss Helen Zimmern to the quick, and she determined to familiarize the British public with legends which in Persia are recited with pride and recounted with pleasure. What must be the verdict of the enterprise the answer involves an explanation. In the first place, it must be conceded that the simple Arabian language adopted is calculated, "by removing the stories from everyday speech to remove them from the atmosphere of to-day." In this respect Miss Zimmern is to be congratulated, still more so as regards the Oriental form of diction adopted. Were it not that she takes pains to assure the world that she labours under the disadvantage of being ignorant of the tongue in which the Shah Namah "is written, it might well have been supposed that the case were otherwise, for the phraseology employed is quite in harmony with the style and habits of thought which characterize the Persian race: her metaphors are Eastern, her similes are Oriental. Praise, too, is due to the success with which the difficult task of compression has been discharged, though obviously much is omitted. The work as it stands is a homogeneous whole—complete in its scope, though curtailed in its details. To pare down 60,000 verses to a limit of 350 pages is no easy task. Up to this point it would not be possible to be too lavish of encomiums. What is done is done well, and it is but fair to give credit where credit is due. But Miss Zimmern has failed precisely where it was inevitable that such would be the case. Her quaint plain prose, touching in simplicity as it is, necessarily lacks the grand dignity and flowing sweetness of the original verse. When it is considered that the "Shah Namah" is one of the most mellifluous compositions in the most mellifluous language of the East, it may well be understood how a plain paraphrase needs must fall on dull and listless ears. Nor must it be forgotten that the legends which the "Epic of Kings" is designed to commemorate are not in themselves of a nature to attract much attention, apart from the tradition of national splendour with which they are irreparably linked. A Persian may recall with pride the days when the mighty hero Rustam was wont to raise his mace and crush the heads of the swarming multitudes who pressed around his steed—the famous charger which could fly like the wind, and dart over the ground like a flash of lightning. The contest between Iran and Turan appeals to the passions of men descended from those two great branches of the human family; but to interest other nationalities the story must be told in language which touches the sympathies and arouses the passions of readers separated by descent and birth from those who look upon Shiraz and Ispahan as the centre of their aspirations and the "Qiblah" of their adorations. What would a Persian think were some fellow countryman to translate Milton's "Paradise Lost" into plain, unsympathetic prose? It is not the tale so much as the teller which has immortalized the contest of the powers of darkness with the Angels of Light. Analyze the great poems of our nation, and to what will they amount if stripped of the language to which they owe their attraction and their charm?

These remarks are not written in any depreciatory spirit; but it would be unfair to record an unqualified success when in the nature of things this is not feasible. Even Miss Zimmern, talented and enterprising as she is, cannot accomplish the impossible; and no small modicum of success has been reserved for her in that she has conveyed to the public some notion of that great and splendid triumph of human genius, the immortal "Epic of Kings" of Firdusi the Persian.

"So many unknown brethren? that it folds Lakhs of loved friends in parting? Ah! but there Lingers my heart, leave-taking: and it roves
From hut to hut whispering 'he knows, and loves!'
Good-night! Good-night! Sweet may your slumbers be, Yunga! and Kasi! and Saraswati."

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S CORRESPONDENCE WITH HIS SISTER. 1832-1852.*

The present series of correspondence presents a marked contrast to the "Home Letters" written by Lord Beaconsfield in 1830-31. The latter drew aside the veil of a rising and intellectual mind, and revealed the man of thought and reflection; the former throws light upon the political life of a Statesman, destined in the fulness of time to achieve a success, to gain a reputation but seldom vouchsafed to a member of the Legislature, possessing at the outset no advantages of wealth or station, but trusting to his own powers and relying upon his own zeal to push his way to the front. Let us take a glance at the inner workings of a great mind.

On 7th February, 1833, Disraeli went to the House of Commons; he heard a fine debate in which the leading orators of the day took part, amongst the number Macaulay. This was the criticism of the spectator in the gallery:—"Between ourselves I could floor them all. This entre nous. I was never more confident of anything than that I could carry everything before me in that House. The time will come." "Thirty-five years after," adds the editor, "he was Prime Minister." At the present day the power of the Press is well-nigh unlimited, it is certainly undeniable, but half a century ago matters were different. It showed, therefore, no ordinary prescience on the part of Disraeli to have discerned that a newspaper was a power. "Tis a great thing to have such an organ for response as the Times." Yes, true in his day even, but the truth was concealed from ordinary minds.

In 1836 he "carried" the Carlton, though there were 400 candidates, "and all in their own opinion with equal claims."

In 1837 the dream of his life came within a measurable distance of fulfilment. Three times had Disraeli wooed the constituency of High Wycombe; but Fortune was against him, and he was defeated. Nothing daunted, he turned his attention to Maidstone, and "canvassed on his own influence." On this occasion success attended his efforts, and on the 15th November he entered the House of Commons as Member for that borough. Well nigh a month elapsed ere he made his maiden speech, a memorable event, which took place on the 8th December, 1837. "My début was a failure," was his own criticism on his own performance; "but the failure," it is added in explanation, "was not occasioned by my breaking down or any incompetency on my part, but from the physical powers of my adversaries. . . . "I fought through all with undaunted pluck and unruffled temper, made occasionally good isolated hits when there was silence, and finished with spirit when I found a formal display was ineffectual." "Undaunted pluck;" that was indeed the keynote of Disraeli's character. Sir Robert Peel—no mean judge—thought highly of the youthful politician's rhetorical effort. "Some of my party were disappointed, and talk of failure; I say just the reverse. He did all that he could do under the circumstances. I say anything but failure; he must make his way." True to the letter was the latter prediction, and few men ever held the House of Commons so spellbound as, in his time, Benjamin Disraeli, the orator, statesman, and man of letters.

"Gladstone spoke well;" the remark written in 1838 has gained accumulated force by the lapse of time. Seven years later the record runs, "Gladstone's address was involved and ineffective. He may have an avenir, but I hardly think it." The prediction was unsound; no prophet could have foreseen the feeble flaccidity of political zeal during the later years of the nineteenth century; none could have anticipated the events of the last two decades, aye, of the last two months. Yes, Gladstone is a power, this is undeniable; but in what direction? Each reader must form his own opinion.

A year later, on the 28th August, Disraeli married Mrs. Wyndham Lewis, the widow of his former colleague in the representation of Maidstone; the "pretty little woman, a flirt and a rattle" of 1832, became the wife of the Statesman of 1839—and well it was so. The union was happy to a degree seldom the lot of poor fallen humanity, and richly did he repay the loving devotion of a loving spouse when he laid at her feet in after years the coronet of a peeress. Mrs. Wyndham Lewis was destined in the fulness of time to become Countess of Beaconsfield.

After the interval of a decade Disraeli became the acknowledged leader of the Conservative party in the House of Commons, a position which he held for the lengthened period of thirty-two years—a position which ended only with his death in 1881. The same year (1849) he commenced to address his letters from Hughenden Manor, where he had settled when returned for Bucks in 1847. The spot is hallowed in the national memory by the circumstance that amidst all the pomp and splendour of a splendid career, amidst all the successes and triumph of a successful life, he ever loved to step aside from the glittering scenes of "might, majesty, and dominion" to enjoy, in company with the wife he adored, the wife who adored him, those pleasures of solitude, those charms of nature, which refreshed his intellect and soothed his brain—pleasures of heart, pleasures of home. 'Twas the Romance of Statesmanship!

In 1852 Disraeli accepted office under Lord Derby, and became Chancellor of the Exchequer—and how did he fare? His own testimony is this:—"The Court gracious, the Press amiable, and our friends in the country considerate." Aye, considerate they were, and considerate they are—considerate to a man who did them such noble service—considerate to a man who raised statesmanship in the scale of politics, and made the name of England honoured and revered—considerate to a man at whose death the nation penned the epitaph, "Peace with honour." Aye, shades of a country's pride—a country's glory—the mighty Empire of which you so long and ably swayed the destinies, will ever be considerate to your memory, considerate to your triumphs, considerate to your failures, considerate to your life, considerate to your death.

It needs no words from a reviewer to draw attention to the most charming—most interesting—correspondence now presented to the public. All will read it, and none will be disappointed. It is the biography of a genius told in the free language of affection. Its appearance is opportune, and its publication welcome.

THE ILLUSTRATED NAVAL AND MILITARY MAGAZINE.*

"The Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine" contains several articles of professional interest, amongst others one suggesting "a new form of attack and system of manœuvring troops in open formation," by Major C. W. Babington, 3rd Bengal Native Infantry, which will probably give rise to some discussion in military circles. Major Babington's suggestions are in many respects ingenious, and his ideas are shown very clearly in diagrams, but a company formation with sixteen non-commissioned officers in the ranks, and changes of command in action by juniors superseding seniors, will hardly be accepted by the "carping critic" as "order in disorder."

Colonel Malleon continues his interesting and instructive papers on "Europe in Arms," the present one being devoted to the Austro-Hungarian Navy.

"A Scamper through Russia" is also a continuation of a pleasantly written reminiscence by Major Charles Ross, but does the gallant Major's memory serve him quite faithfully in the statement he gives of the Highlanders having had a "sharp brush" with the enemy during the Kertch Expedition, under Sir George Brown in 1855? That officer in his official despatch to Lord Raglan made no mention of this, but wrote, "We have got possession of all we proposed without striking a blow and almost without firing a shot." When, too, did a patrol of the 10th Hussars "kill or capture a man" any number of Cossacks? A body of Cossacks in September, 1855, near Kertch, took prisoners a sergeant-major, farrier, and thirteen men of that distinguished corps, when Captain Clarke gallantly charged with thirty-four men into about fifty Russians, who had a reserve of 300 behind them.

"The Fool of the Regiment," by J. S. Winter, is light enough reading, but the author of "Boote's Baby" can do better than this.

Major Walford continues his account of the Parliamentary Generals of the Great Civil War, and Mr. Arthur Grey supplies a biographic sketch of Sir John Bateman-Champaign, which will give satisfaction to the friends of that distinguished officer.

Major Elliott, the indefatigable editor, writes some able criticisms on military inventions and current social topics, and in his continuation of the "National Record of the Victoria Cross," shows himself to be a sympathising historian of gallant deeds.

This Magazine fully deserves the support it is receiving at home and abroad.

THE ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE.*

The "Army and Navy Magazine" presents its readers with a continuation of Baron von der Goltz's exhaustive essay, "The Nation in Arms," the translation of which is excellently done. A capital paper called, "A Chat about the Straits," gives much information graphically told of those flourishing settlements of which the stay-at-home Briton knows so little. The story of the "Defence of Kahun," by Mr. C. R. Williams, is brought to a conclusion in the present number. Lieut.-Colonel Hildyard commences what promises to be an interesting historical sketch of the "French Conquest of Algeria;" and "On Leave" winds up the month in the usual bright chatty form.

BOOKS RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.—"Wanderings in China," by Miss C. F. Gordon-Cumming; "Glossary of Anglo-Indian Words," by Colonel Yule; "The Kilima-Njaro Expedition" by H. H. Johnston; "Through the British Empire," by Baron von Hubner; "The Western Pacific and New Guinea," by H. H. Romilly; "Half Hours with Muhammad," by A. N. Wollaston; "Letters and Despatches of Horatio Viscount Nelson," selected and arranged by J. K. Laughton; and "Frank's Rancho; or, My Holiday in the Rockies."

THE DEFENCE OF KAHUN.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR.—In your recent notice of the last number of the Army and Navy Magazine, prominence is very properly given to Colonel Williams's reproduction of Captain Lewis Brown's modest and matter-of-fact account of his, and his comrades' defence of Kahun, as one of the incidental episodes of the first Afghan War. Whilst quite agreeing with both your own and Colonel Williams's estimate of the special interest that attaches to this narrative, it seems to me worth while mentioning that the story is not quite so rare as may be supposed. It is only from memory I write—not being within reach of the book—but I believe that Captain Brown's narrative of the leaguer of Kahun, or the chief portion of his Journal, as now so suitably presented in the Army and Navy Magazine, will be found in the Appendix to Vincent Eyre's account of the Afghan War of 1838–42.

It is of more special interest to mention the way in which this by-way of Indian military history was brought to my own notice. Being at Poona in 1866 or 1867, I called to pay my respects to Sir Robert (Lord) Napier, then Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Army and Member of Executive Council. There were several topics of interest about which his Excellency was kind enough to converse with me, as, "like a good householder, he brought forth from his treasury things old and new." Amongst these Sir Robert spoke of the rank and file of the Bombay Army, in whose condition, quality, and welfare he was taking great interest. It chanced that I had casually mentioned having met the day before with a Captain Brown, then, I believe, Adjutant of the 22nd Bombay Regiment, and on this hint the Chief was at once reminded of his father and the gallant defence of Kahun. Thereupon his Excellency went and took down from his shelves Vincent Eyre's work to lend me, in order that I might read in the Appendix thereof this narrative, now published in more accessible magazine form, and which, to quote your words, "is most interesting as a record of coolness and pluck under difficulties."

* The "Army and Navy Magazine." London: W. H. Allen and Co. 1886.

The Chief's more special object in drawing my attention to the episode, as far as I remember the drift of his remarks, was to emphasize his conviction of the capacity for endurance that could on occasion be exhibited by the Bombay Sepoy. Certainly that quality was proved to the full in the defence of Kahun, however purposeless, on the part of Sir John Keane, as you consider, was the occupation of that obscure post in the Beluch mountains.

Shortly after that conversation I had with Sir Robert he was called upon to put the endurance of the Bombay Sepoy to the utmost test in assisting him to "plant the flag of St. George on the mountains of Rasselas."—I am, yours truly,
West Kensington, May 1st. W. MARTIN WOOD.

A SANSKRIT ODE.

The following is a translation of the Sanskrit Ode, composed and recited by Pandit Gangadhar Sastri, on the 5th instant, on the occasion of the visit of the Viceroy to the Benares College:—

"A happy day it is, indeed, for us on which our beloved Viceroy finds time to turn aside for a moment from all the weighty duties of Government, and to honour with his presence the quiet precincts of our ancient College.

"He is on his way to open a new centre of European learning in a neighbouring city, but yet he is unwilling to overlook the lotus flower of Hindu lore rocking on the placid breast of Ganga.

"A rumour is flying through our cities that under the auspices of our revered Viceroy and our Lieutenant-Governor a new era will dawn for learning and education in these Provinces. May we, the representatives of the ancient learning, venture to give humble expression to our hopes and wishes.

"Gratefully indeed we acknowledge and willingly we receive the treasures of Western Learning and Science; but at the same time we cannot forget that we are Hindus, and our hearts cling fondly to whatever is good and great in our country's past.

"Ought not a Hindu to remember that the sweet strains of poetry resounded of old on the banks of the Yamuna and the Kaveri no less than on the Thames and Avon; and that in the deep shade of Indian woods sages had pondered over the riddles of life and death long before the world had heard of the grove of Academe?

"May the wisdom of our august rulers find ways to infuse into our national life all the precious influences of European culture and civilisation without destroying the tender roots which hold it to the past!

"For many centuries our beloved Kasi has been the chosen seat of learning, the favourite abode of Sarasvati; may it be destined to maintain in the future its high place with undiminished honour!

"May it be enabled to become a centre where the East and the West meet; where the disciple may learn whatever Western Science and Learning have to teach, and yet keep his ear and mind open to the voice of ancient Eastern wisdom!

"Where he may learn to stand in the van of progress and civilisation, and yet to remain a true son of the country which gave him birth!

"May the Almighty Lord of all, who has hitherto guided your steps to the welfare of our country, continue to bestow on you His choicest blessings; this is our hope and prayer."

THEEBAW IN EXILE.

RUTNAGHERRY, APRIL 17.

King Theebaw, his two queens, and party were landed at about 7.30 this morning. Theebaw was brought on shore by coolies in an arm-chair, which was wholly covered with Turkey red. The two queens were then brought to shore. Theebaw, who is about twenty-three years of age, is a strong-built, middle sized man, with a round, fair, Chinese complexion, and wears a slight moustache. He has a prepossessing appearance, and the gait and behaviour of a refined person. He had put on a white silk coat reaching down to his knees, and had a silk langoti of variegated colours. He was wearing a white silk puggree like the rim of a Persian hat, from the top of which his plaits of hair, which were tied up in the form of a cone, were visible. He was also wearing silk stockings and kid leather shoes, and on the whole he presented a smart appearance. On each side of his breast there were attached to the silk coat two rows of diamonds and rubies of the size of small chestnuts in gold settings, which shone brightly in the morning rays of the sun. Sopayah Lat, his favourite queen, was dressed in a small white silk petticoat with pink and blue frontages, and a silk langoti, stockings, and English shoes. The upper portion of her chest, which was bare, was ornamented with a huge diamond necklace some three or four rows deep, while a sort of a coronet set with rubies, emeralds, and diamonds, fixed into the folds of her hair just above her forehead. She had also huge gold rings set with a large diamond and emerald on either side of it fixed into the holes bored into the lobes of her ears. It is said that she exercises even now the same influence and authority over her consort as she did in the past. She was not so lively and indifferent to her fate as her royal consort, but appeared as if she were a little out of sorts, and seemed to feel her position. The other queen, who was similarly dressed and decorated with diamonds and rubies and emeralds as Sopayah Lat, did not, however, present a desponding appearance. She is at all events more handsome and lively than the rival queen.

In the second boat were brought the six maids of honour and two infant children of Theebaw. The maids of honour were dressed in much the same way as the two queens, but they had not their magnificent jewels to decorate themselves with. But still each one decorated as they were carried a mine of wealth with her. Two of these maids carried among other very valuable articles two huge bowls which are made of pure gold. These maids of honour and the two children were then driven home in other carriages, the several attendants accompanying them. Two Burmese gentlemen accompany the party, and it is said that they are employed to act as interpreters between the royal party and the English officials. The representatives of the Press applied to one of these interpreters after he had been landed for certain information, but he replied "nay" to every question put by them. It was afterwards discovered that the interpreter did not know one word of English, and all he wished to convey by saying "nay" to their questions was that he did not understand the language in which he was addressed.

MEN in power, says the Indian Spectator, cannot remind our educated classes too often that the ultimate object of State education is not confined to the four corners of State employment. It is a mean ambition, discreditable alike to the givers of education and the receivers. On the other hand, it would be well if the powers that be remembered that India is extremely poor, that education is perhaps the best means, as it is the best claim, to material prosperity. "Are we educated only to be neglected?" That seems to be the feeling of our young men. If the policy of the Government is such as is implied by the question (which we deny) it is a most foolish policy. We may also observe that it is not the neglect of his own claims which is resented by the educated Indian, so much as the recognition of the claims of outsiders. It is this which deepens his appointment into active resentment.

THE VICEROY'S MEMORANDUM ON BURMA.

Before leaving Rangoon; after his visit to Mandalay, the Viceroy drew up an important memorandum on the present and future prospects of Upper Burma. The following are some of the principal paragraphs:—

"Before leaving Rangoon there are a few matters in regard to which it may perhaps be advantageous I should state my opinion and wishes. In the first place, I desire to record my high appreciation of the manner in which the Chief Commissioner, Mr. Bernard, has discharged the heavy responsibilities which have been imposed upon him during the last few months. His ability, disinterestedness, courage and industry have been conspicuous throughout the recent crisis, and it is with the utmost confidence, should Her Majesty's Government approve, that I confide the future of United Burma to his keeping.

"When at Mandalay I took the opportunity of informing the Hlutdau that the administration of Burma should pass at once under the direct control of British officers. I have made a similar announcement at Rangoon, but it will probably be desirable that the Chief Commissioner should take measures for at once disabusing the whole Burmese population of the idea that there is any chance of the re-establishment of a Native Prince on the throne. They should be told that the Queen-Empress is now their Sovereign; that their welfare has become a matter of solicitude to a strong and powerful Government who will respect their customs rights, privileges, and religious institutions, and will effectually provide for the protection of life and property. At the same time the gangs of insurgents should be extensively warned that if they will come in and lay down their arms and return to a life of order and industry they will be treated with due consideration. On the other hand, an equally decided communication should be made of our intention to trample out dacoity and all crimes of violence at any cost.

"Soon after my arrival in the country I informed Mr. Bernard that I thought it would be desirable to avoid the further infliction of capital punishment as much as possible. Of course, if a criminal is caught red-handed in an act of murder or rapine, he should be visited with the punishment due to such atrocities, as it is our first duty to protect the peaceable inhabitants of the country from injury and wrong. For some time past martial law, which for a short period was the only alternative, had been superseded by the authority of civil magistrates, and I understand that under no circumstances have any penalties been inflicted except at the instance of our civil officers. This rule should be steadily adhered to, and great pains should be taken to administer justice in such a manner as will stand the test of searching public criticism. Very shortly the present abnormal powers of the Viceroy will be replaced by a more legal satisfactory régime.

"The goods in the palace of Mandalay, and any other property which it may be desired to dispose of, should be sold to the best advantage either at Mandalay itself or in Calcutta or elsewhere. All jewellery, however, not manifestly of a comparatively unimportant character, should be collected together and sent to England, including especially pieces the exact nature and quality which are not clearly recognised. Professor Maskelyne, of Oxford, has warned Her Majesty's Government that many of Runjeet Singh's treasures were sold, through ignorance as to their character, much below their value; and he imagines that many priceless articles must have been found in the palace. He more especially mentions ruby, sapphires, blood red garnet, jade specimens, and rubellite. Though I fear his expectations are unfounded, the suggestions of the Professor should be carefully attended to. Such articles of furniture, &c., as cannot be sold at Mandalay should be packed under the directions of the committee which I authorised Mr. Bernard to constitute, and be forwarded to Calcutta. The Palace at Mandalay itself should be carefully preserved as a public building. It may be desirable to transfer to England one or two of the small detached houses which, while they form no essential part of this building, are very fine representations of Burmese wooden architecture; but upon this point I will give directions hereafter. The Rev. Mr. Colbeck has been asked to make a rough catalogue of the Pala manuscripts, which will be transmitted to the Government of India and a copy of which sent to the Home Government. Meantime these manuscripts should be carefully kept in our own custody.

"As I have already had opportunity of publicly expressing my recognition of the services of the military, naval, and volunteer forces engaged in the late expedition, as well as those of the members of the Civil Service who co-operated with them, I need say no more at present on that head; and I cannot help recording my deep regret at the unfortunate incident which accompanied certain capital executions which were carried out at Mandalay. The photographing by the Provost-Marshal of prisoners in the act of being shot was a most lamentable occurrence. It is no good alleging that the fate of the unfortunate people themselves was not aggravated, inasmuch as they were ignorant of what was happening; the same palliation might be alleged in the case of persons who dishonoured and mutilated the bodies of their fallen foes. Such treatment does not affect the victims, but it is nevertheless inhuman. To endeavour to extract evidence from prisoners under threat of death was a still more serious offence against the ordinary principles of justice. General Prendergast will be instructed to hold a court of inquiry on the case, and its proceedings will be transmitted to Government at Calcutta. Mr. Bernard should ask General Prendergast to keep him informed of what takes place, and should endeavour, so far as his personal influence can prevail, to secure that the proceedings are sustained by any professional partiality.

"I have received information that the Governor of Yunan has sent one of his officers to the confines of Burma for the purpose, it is said, of maintaining order and turning back any of the disbanded soldiery of the late King. Though I have every hope that we may be able to reach a satisfactory understanding with China, a very vigilant watch must be kept on our Northern Frontier."

MARRIAGE DOWRIES IN INDIA.

One of the Madras papers has received from a correspondent some curious details of the market value of degreedars of Universities as husbands:—

Mr. Runganatha Moodeliar, in an address read at Patcheappa's Hall, during the anniversary of the girls' schools of the Maharajah of Vizianagaram, strongly condemned the folly of jewellery. I am no less averse to the evil, and used to lecture in private circles against its ruinous consequences, and I wrote a letter to the Madras Times some time ago condemning the evil, and urging the Government to impose prohibitory tax on jewel-making, which destroys so much treasure of the Government, and keeps it from its legitimate object of currency. It is calculated that the country thus loses no less than five million pounds annually, productive of immense hardships to the people, from growing scarcity and from growing poverty. Moreover, it adds to the insecurity of the wearers, inviting murders, and other crimes. Without speaking about the mischievous consequences of the evil on principles of political economy, I would speak about the causes and remedies to remove that evil. Mr. Runganatha Moodeliar says that the folly arises from the ignorance of the females, and that female education will be an effective panacea. He is mistaken in this. It is the ignorant classes that are simple in this respect. The more educated the more extravagant the people grow in jewellery. The only exception is with regard to those females, like some native Christians, who adopt semi-Anglo-Indian fashions and costumes, and who are comparatively not much addicted to the evil. Even in educated females, the evil is not so much due to the females themselves, but to the growing perversion of taste of our University graduates and under-graduates.

Among the natives of this country, as is the case everywhere, males and females consult the tastes and approval of the opposite sex in their personal adornments. Now, as a matter of fact, the tastes of our young graduates has so much degenerated that young girls are forced to suit themselves to the demand. In marriage transactions, the object of an enlightened and truly learned young man is to seek a bride of accomplishments, education, character and respectability. Then the condition of jewels to be given to the bride. Before the University system came into existence, there was less bargaining about jewels as the price of marriage. Among Brahmins, on account of the comparative scarcity of marriageable girls, owing to child-marriage and forced widowhood, the bridal parties are more gainers than losers for the sake of brides. But where bridegrooms happen to be graduates or under-graduates, the income of the bridal parties is foregone. They make what is called Kannigai danam, i.e., giving girls in marriage to bridegrooms without any consideration. But in some cases, in favour of graduates and under-graduate bridegrooms, the bridal parties spend enormous sums contrary to usage. But among non-Brahmin natives invariably the bridal parties have to spend enormously on marriage; far beyond their means.

The scale seems to run as follows, and shows clearly the inestimable advantage of education in India:—

On an average, a B. A. bridegroom should have a girl with about Rs. 1,500 worth of jewels and upwards. An F. A. should have jewels worth about Rs. 1,000 and upwards with his bride. A Matriculate would not accept a girl who does not put on jewels worth Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 and upwards. I speak from known instances in my own family circle and outside. What must be the hardships and distress of parents who are driven to the necessity of providing their girls with jewels worth Rs. 1,500, 1,000 or 600? It has become the proverb of natives that even a king, if he has five daughters born to him, will become a pauper. As among the Rajputs, whose foolish custom is always to find bridegrooms richer than their daughters, great hardships arise from the difficulty or impossibility of getting them among the people; if parents are not sufficiently rich to give the required jewels great hardships arise. Among Rajputs, the practice leads to the forced virginity of girls, which the parents feel keenly, more than forced widowhood. This is the cause of infanticide. The same amount of misery is felt when girls cannot get married for this extravagance. A missionary lady who has the welfare of native females at heart, and who is the mother-in-law of two military officers, told me that she could not get her daughters married under the circumstances when each daughter would walk away with hundreds or thousands of rupees worth of jewels, in addition to other expenses connected with the marriage. She told me that at a missionary meeting at Kodikanal several native Christian people complained that the graduates and under-graduate bridegrooms demand enormous jewels for their brides. On account of the ruinous demand, they have to choose between the two alternatives, of buying costly jewels far beyond their means, and of reducing themselves to poverty and indebtedness, or of keeping their daughters in forced virginity. I know of even pious native clergymen and their virtuous daughters, though rising far above the vanity and pomp of jewels and other artificial ornaments, being forced to be extravagant far beyond their means, and being reduced to a state of indebtedness in consequence. Then what must be the extent of the evil with other people? Girls, however accomplished, virtuous, educated, and enlightened, have no charms without jewellery, with the young graduates and under-graduates, who would prefer any other woman if she were loaded with jewels.

So we arrive at the uncharitable conclusion, that learning is not followed by the Madras under-graduate for its own sake alone, or even for posts in Government employ. It is as a means to matrimony that the honours of the schools are chiefly valuable.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR HUGH GOUGH from the Sealkote District will officiate for Major-General T. E. Gordon in the Rohilkhand District, while the latter is in command of the Allahabad Division. Brigadier-General F. B. Norman will command at Sealkote during Major-General Gough's absence.

COLONEL J. UPPERTON, on completion of the special duty with the Foreign Officers, is posted to Meerut for general duty.

COLONEL PERESFORD LOVETT, C.S.I., R.E., is posted to the charge of the Rawal Pindi Command Military Works.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL A. P. BROOME, Squadron Commander, 12th Bengal Cavalry, has been appointed second in command of the 18th Bengal Cavalry, vice Lieutenant-Colonel H. C. Marsh.

MAJOR CHAPMAN, South Lancashire Regiment, has been appointed A.-D.-C. to Major-General Flood.

COLONEL KNOWLES, now Assistant Adjutant, and Quartermaster-General at home, has been appointed Adjutant-General of the Bombay Army.

CAPTAIN SAWYER, 14th Sikhs, has been appointed Officiating Assistant Quartermaster-General, Intelligence Branch.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL COOK resigns his appointment of Assistant Adjutant-General, Oudh Division, for the purpose of taking up the temporary command of the 14th Sikhs.

THE Madras Times is glad to hear, on the best authority, that the recent persistent reports regarding the alleged cowardly behaviour of some of the Madras troops in Burma, especially as regards one regiment, are utterly without foundation. The troops in question had never been in action before. They were suddenly fired into on all sides, and as brave and efficient an officer as there is in the army states that he felt at the time as unhappy as his men. Even then the men did not retire, but were soon to the front again, and ever afterwards always went straight for the enemy. A body of the same regiment out of action—altogether, say, 1,000 yards—did, by a mistaken order, retire some twenty-five to thirty yards, and then marched back to their original position. The 80 per cent. of the officers of the gallant regiment in question who were wounded are doing well.

THE BURDWAN RAJ LIBEL CASE.—A Calcutta paper, in announcing the fact that Mr. Miller, of the Burdwan Raj, is about to prosecute the Statesman for libel, adds:—"The sinews of war will, it is presumed, be defrayed by parties deeply interested. The affair promises to be one of the liveliest of the kind that the Anglo-Indian public have had any experience of." In discussing the case the Civil and Military Gazette says:—"When the Statesman is at issue with any man, it generally begins by calling him a 'fatuous idiot,' and concludes by deploring his 'drivelling imbecility.' To the best of its knowledge and belief, the Statesman is then polite and courteous. The Bengal Government knows the weight and worth of the Statesman's charges, and, so far, has not given them their instant attention. Mr. Miller, manager of the Burdwan Raj, being less philosophical, however, has done so, and is about to institute a criminal prosecution for libel. It is possible that he believes his character to have been wantonly blackened; but a resident of nearly twenty years' standing ought to know that the Statesman's wrath is a thing to be proud of; and that its printed libels are testimonials none the less valuable for being scattered broadcast. A man solemnly cursed by the Statesman must have good points."

THE OPENING CEREMONY.—INDIAN CHIEFS.

So far as the opening ceremony was concerned the Colonial and Indian Exhibition must be pronounced a great success. Editors and reporters have been trying to exhaust the wealth of language and the brilliancy of metaphor in descriptions of the scene. Certainly the programme, excellently devised, was faithfully carried out, and the highest praise is due to the executive officials for the intelligence, taste and ability with which they planned and perfected so great and difficult an undertaking. The ceremony in all its details was most effective and impressive, and there were, perhaps, few spectators present who ever before beheld so grand a sight—for although the opening of the Exhibition of 1851 was a more gorgeous display in the way of colour and scenic changes, that of the present year had a more thrilling interest and a deeper significance. To the Englishman, and to the stranger within his gates, it had a meaning which could not be misunderstood. It told in unmistakable characters of the present power and of the future illimitable wealth of resource of that Empire of which Queen Victoria holds the sceptre. And let it be hoped that it told, too, of a strength of union between the Mother Country and her Colonies, which, if it has to be tested in some yet distant hour of trial, may verify the boast :—

"Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them."

That the occasion was taken advantage of to welcome with an outburst of loyal enthusiasm the presence of the Queen was natural enough, although this circumstance has been written of as an unexpected and gratifying surprise! That welcome was a proof that however much Her Majesty's seclusion is regretted, British loyalty is a living force still. It is not a blind idolatry for the regal purple, nor the acceptance of any belief in the divine right of kings, but the expression of a nation's faith in itself. An English monarch should live in the hearts of the people, and that it is easy to do so the enthusiastic greeting on this occasion went far to prove. Listening to the cheers which rang throughout the vast building, as the last strains of the "National Anthem" died away, the Queen-Empress must have felt that their echoes extended farther—that wherever the British flag was flying—in near or distant lands—that feeling of loyalty was the same. And from no part of the Empire would stronger proof of loyalty be forthcoming than from India, in whose ancient classic language a portion of that anthem was sung :—

Ragya—prapālinim
Saddharma—sālinim
Tām totā—mālinim
Pāhīvara !"

It is to be regretted, however, that there were so few representatives of the nobles or peoples of India present! It was understood, when the question of holding an exhibition in which India was to take part was finally settled, that some of the great Chiefs or their sons would visit England, but difficulties stood in the way, and the idea which at first found favour with the Government was abandoned. It is believed that one difficulty was that of expense, owing to the necessity, according to Eastern etiquette, of each Chief bringing with him a large body of retainers; and another difficulty was that of precedence—a matter upon which a Native noble is much more punctilious than even a Spanish grandee. But great as these difficulties no doubt were, they were not altogether insuperable, and much good might have resulted could they have been cleared away. The idea was not a new one. It was mooted twenty-eight years ago, in an able article in the Calcutta Review to the following effect :—

"To the Government we would suggest with all humility the adoption of a practice which, recommended as it is by reason and endorsed by history, we cannot but wonder it has so long overlooked. We would recommend that it takes a leaf from the book of Roman policy and practice in dealing with the upper ten thousand of Native Indian society. Native Princes and noblemen and men of independent fortune should be invited, encouraged, urged, we had almost written forced, to go to England. They would there behold, in all its majesty, the spectacle of English power and science and refinement. They would there learn the utter worthlessness of Indian prejudice and pride, the utter insignificance of Indian pomp and pageantry. With opened eyes and awakened understandings they would return humbler, wiser, and better men. They would return to be firmer allies, truer and more active friends, more intelligent citizens, and more loyal subjects. They would return with weakened prejudice and heightened and more sagacious appreciation to teach their subjects, their associates, and their dependents the goodly lesson they had learnt, and to lay the foundation of, and pave the way for, that general awakening and enlightenment of the Indian people which we all so fervently desire."

If this suggestion was possible of being carried out in 1858, when caste and dread of crossing the "dark water" were such powerful obstacles, it must be a simpler matter of arrangement in 1886, when these obstacles hardly exist. When the Queen was proclaimed Empress of India at Delhi in 1877 the Native Chiefs were bidden to the Imperial Assemblage to hear read what to them—pleasantly disguise the fact as we may—was a manifesto of power. Even although the words were words of kindness, they were addressed from the conqueror to the conquered, and this was felt by more than one proud representative of a fallen dynasty, in whom they called up only rankling memories of the past. Such memories would have faded away for ever in the sunshine of the scene on Tuesday last if the Chiefs of India could have been present, and have heard from the lips of the Empress of India herself that the prayer of her heart was for "the strengthening of the bonds of union" between her and them.

THE COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.

PRESS OPINIONS.

THE details of the opening ceremony have been fully given by the daily Press. The journals are of one opinion as to the magnificence of the spectacle, and as to the happy results to be drawn from this "meeting" of Great Britain with her Colonies and India.

Of the scene itself the Court Journal says:—

All the resources of regal pageantry were brought into play to give dignity, honour, and effect. What regal pageantry is, is new to many of the present day. The Hall of Heraldry, nestled in the heart of the City, sent forth for this episode all its varied and singular array, kindred to nothing of our modern lives, but punctiliously correct to the past and great times of chivalry. Everything done, said, and worn by the King of Arms and his officers, many and curiously titled, has a significance connected with our country's honour; and those who respect times when the power and strength of the nation were gradually growing and solidifying, till at last the culminating is in what we now behold and enjoy, will suppress the smile, and respect even the maces, the embroideries, the tabards, and mantles, and all the blazonry and gorgeous paraphernalia. The Queen's own entourage was the very fullest and grandest that could be organised for a State procession, and to this were added the tribute of officials of the Colonies, and of India that day decked in its costliest.

All eyes had one centre of attraction, the Queen's throne, a glorious structure indeed; originally it belonged to Runjeet Singh, then became the property of the East India Company, and, when all the glories of that establishment vanished, it merged into the possession of a department of the great British rule. It is a throne of solid gold, on a dais covered with scarlet cloth, richly trimmed with gold. On this also were gold and crimson chairs placed on each side of the throne; while the canopy above it was at once gorgeous and tasteful, being composed of massive bullion trimmings on a scarlet material, on which gems were worked, the whole combining to form curtains, on which was embroidered an Imperial Crown and the monogram of our Empress and Queen. Behind this were state chairs for the Royal and distinguished suite. This was the point de mire, which kept the minds of the thousands assured of the fact of the regal character of the proceedings which they had gathered to see and hear, though at last it seemed as if expectation had wearied them out, for a marked solemnity settled on the assemblage, and there were occasional moments of absolute silence, which people seemed afraid to disturb, and spoke in whispered or subdued tones.

At length that which outside the Hall was doubtless loud ringing cheering came in subdued tones to the anxiously-expectant throng, and then more suddenly than could have been expected the Queen stood before them; and the thousands impulsively uprose—an imposing and animated spectacle. "God Save the Queen" was sung and played. Never to us did it seem more impressive, and on few occasions in the memory of the oldest present has it been so memorable and striking. Sanctioned by the authority of the Queen the second verse was specially for her Indian subjects. This meant a great deal, and every one understood the intent. Then followed three ringing cheers, and one cheer more for "the Union." Again there could be no mistaking the intent. The Queen bowed lowly, bowed again and again. They were thankful bows—they spoke, and said, the Queen from her heart appreciated and was grateful for the loyalty of her people of all lands, and acknowledged the courtesy of those who were foreign and yet, as was observable, joined lustily in the British cheering. Enthusiasm is catching. Our Sovereign must have felt that her life had indeed been worth the living to have enjoyed such a grand and memorable ovation, and to see around her the great gathering of her own family—princes and princesses, her children and children's children, all honoured and happy. This was the supreme event of the day, though what followed was in every respect worthy of the occasion. Song, choruses, pealing organ, poetry, and (not prosaic because highly important) the address and the response, in which the clear, sweet tones of our Sovereign's voice spoke with pleasure of the bond of union which now exists in every portion of her Empire. Not formal words, for all distinctly marked the emphasis on "now," and understood the impression on her mind. We saw her son kneel reverently to kiss her hand, and raised tenderly, impulsively, from that respectful attitude to receive a mother's embrace. It was the one touch of nature that made all present kin. Hearts were open, impressionable and sympathetic at that moment, and "Home, sweet home," sweetly sung, was never more touching, never more full of meaning, and tears fell in heartfelt response.

When the Royal procession was passing in front of the Indian Palace on Tuesday, where the native workmen were very picturesquely grouped, a striking incident occurred. An aged man, wearing an Eastern dress, stepped forward before the Queen, and, after bowing deeply in the Oriental fashion, read an address to Her Majesty in Hindustanee. He was the foreman of the workmen, and said to have reached the extreme age of 102 years. The Queen smilingly acknowledged the address, and proceeded onwards to the Albert Hall without further incident.

(Times.)

It is no mere collection of the sources and instruments of material strength. It is as the symbol of that moral unity of national sentiment which constitutes a world-wide Empire that the Exhibition appeals most strongly to every subject of the Queen. "The connection of the Colonies and of India with the mother-country," said Lord Rosebery on Saturday, "has been the dream of my life." It has long been the dream of many men besides Lord Rosebery both in England and beyond the seas. The Exhibition may be regarded, in its ideal aspect, as the first step towards the realisation of that dream.

(Daily News.)

In an industrial and commercial sense, the Exhibition will make the other parts of the British Empire better known at home. It will be a reintroduction of the children to the mother-country from which they are separated by distance, but not estranged. It has long been felt to be desirable that England and the Colonies should be better known to each other. The ignorance has been chiefly on our side. In every colony, and among the educated classes in India, the news from the British isles is read with interest as great as that felt for their domestic affairs. To the colonist England is still the old home. The names of our statesmen and politicians are almost as familiar in New Zealand and Canada as they are in England. Our political controversies are followed with almost as much zeal for either side; our literary and scientific men have readers and disciples as zealous as at home. The colonist never forgets the old country. It looms large before him wherever he is, and he feels proud to belong, not merely to his own colony, but to the British Empire. It is most desirable that this feeling should be reciprocated at home.

(Standard.)

The most home-keeping of Britons had an opportunity judging how rich and how wide in its aspects is the heritage which he is a sharer. If the Indian visitors found in the pomp of the procession something not wholly out of keeping with their traditional ideas of Imperial State, their presence was no small feature in the splendour of the picture presented to our eyes. The "serviceable" outfit of many of our kinsmen from the Antipodes—their broad-brimmed hats and loosely-worn coats—formed rather a complement than a contrast to the magnificence of the costumes worn by our fellow-subjects from India and the adjacent Dependencies of the Crown. Through Oriental archways and fairy-like pavilions, the way led on to quarters where the rough-and-ready appliances for pioneering in the backwoods, or campaigning out in the waste, were laid out for inspection. The incongruity—if incongruity it must be called—is emblematical of the manysidedness of British Rule.

(Daily Chronicle.)

Since the days when Ahasuerus, who reigned "from India even unto Ethiopia, over an hundred and seven and twenty provinces, showed the riches of his glorious kingdom and the honour of his “excellent majesty,” there has been no such display of the wealth and resources of a mighty Empire as that which the Queen inaugurated this morning. Her Majesty was met by representatives of almost as many dependencies as those over which Ahasuerus ruled. A mightier India than that which acknowledged his sovereignty now owns allegiance to the “Great Mother” who rules over an Empire upon which the sun never sets—who not only holds “the gorgeous East in fee,” but commands the affections of millions of English-speaking people and millions more of alien races beyond the Atlantic and the Pacific.

THE INDIAN TROOP SHIPS.

(A Passenger's Experience.)

The five ships composing the trooping fleet are alike in size, and have an extreme length of 381 feet, are 49 feet broad, their displacement is 6,211 tons, British registered tonnage 2,706 tons, gross tonnage 4,483 tons. They carry twenty boats capable of receiving 1,129 men in light marching order, or 856 in heavy marching order, in addition to the crew, consisting of 260 men, 70 of whom are stokers. An artillery raft of four immense pontoons covered by 28 planks, capable of carrying 350 men, is also carried; but this could hardly be utilised except in very calm weather. Each ship is divided into 13 water-tight compartments and has four sets of water-tight doors. The ventilation is very perfect and is on the principle known as Dr. Edmond's system. They carry 1,200 tons of coal and consume about 62 tons a day. Their usual rate of steaming is about 11 to 12 knots an hour. As many as 2,000 men with proper proportion of officers have been accommodated on short journeys. There is an ample hospital, also a fair library, and they are now lighted throughout with the electric light on the Brush system, an immense comfort to all on board. From their great size these ships are thoroughly comfortable, the accommodation being as a general rule superior to that of the best mail steamers. The poop deck is 140 feet long, and 50, or to be absolutely correct, 49 feet wide. This allows ample room for walking, sitting, games of all sorts, and even dancing. From the poop the deck continues flush for a few feet on either side to the fore-castle, companion ladders leading down from the break of the poop to a spacious quarter deck and waist. The port side of this deck is set apart for the troops, the starboard side for the wives and children of the men. On this latter side is a railed-in way irreverently called the "Rat Run," and marked "No Thoroughfare." This is reserved for the officers and crew and communicates with the elevated bridge and fore-castle, a most necessary precaution in a crowded ship indeed; it appears to be the only artery of free circulation for the crew in the whole fabric.

Nothing can exaggerate the blessing of the electric light to officers and men; it is absolutely safe (for break the glass globe and the spark is extinguished). Officers can light or darken their cabins at will by simply turning a screw. By the same means the lately funereal troop decks are now brilliant with a cheerful blaze of light, and the men can read and write after dark, a thing formerly unknown. The saloons are spacious, lofty, and beautifully clean and sweet, with an abundance of fresh air and light. The cabins adjoining the saloons are set apart for the officers of the ship, except a large cabin for ladies, a nursery for officers' children, and commodious quarters for the officer commanding the troops. These cabins are so high above the water that their ports are very seldom closed. Descending from the saloon by a broad and very convenient companion astern, the main deck is reached. Here are found the quarters of the military officers. Field officers being accommodated with spacious cabins on each side with often two port holes; captains in inner cabins known as the "horse boxes;" the ventilation of this latter might be better and they are very dark, but this last objection is now satisfied by the electric light. All the cabins are simply but comfortably upholstered, and are larger than any berths told off to passengers by mail steamers. Baths and other conveniences are plentiful, carefully attended to, and properly apportioned, so that, under a kindly discipline, the morning bath is obtained without that dreary waiting so common in passenger steamers. Double swing doors lead from this to the troop deck, vast and fresh always, and now, as before mentioned, a blaze of light by night. Working this description again from astern, a broad companion leads from the main to the orlop deck, commonly known as "Pandemonium." The cabins here again are large, but are lighted by day by scuttles only. These, except in the calmest weathers, are closed, so the accommodation is by no means fancied by the subaltern officers destined to occupy it. From Pandemonium swing doors lead to the lower troop deck. Soldier servants are told off to each officer. These do all the cabin work and attend at meals, the staff of stewards being very small.

But besides all the advantages enumerated, a passage in a troopship is a great economy in these hard times of the depreciated rupee; as with the exception of a small charge for meals and for wines the passage is free of cost. Even the wines are provided at a cheap rate and are good of their kind. A healthy discipline prevails on board. Smoking is allowed in certain places only. Children are kept in order and to a particular portion of the deck. Meals are served at 8.30 A.M., 1 P.M., and 6 P.M., officers appearing at dinner in mess dress. The crew assembles at quarters twice daily, morning and evening, the morning parade being followed by short prayers, as each ship carries a chaplain. Sentries are kept at the life buoys astern, and a boat, inspected every watch, is always kept ready for instant service. Fire quarters are frequent, officers and men being told off to their several places as soon as possible after joining the ship. Among other blessings, one feels uncommonly safe on board a troopship. There is generally plenty of fun after dinner, when the poop deck is lighted up with electricity. There is always a piano and a harmonium on board—the latter for Divine Service; the former a hard-worked and ill-used instrument, which affords an immense amount of amusement. Tugs-of-war are frequent between the troops and the crew, at which, strange to relate, the troops are generally victorious. Concerts, which are made to include dances and recitations, are often got up for the amusement of the men, and in which they join heartily; and theatricals are not unknown. It is wonderful how quickly Jack rigs up a stage. Any sort of amusement is eagerly looked forward to, and much dormant talent is often brought out on board ship.

MAHARAJAH DHULEEP SING.—The Maharajah has declared his intention to give up Christianity in favour of the religion of his forefathers. If he has done this to secure the goodwill of his countrymen, he is too late. The change might have resulted in something five years ago. Even now he is not completely penitent. He does not wish to give up eating meat and drinking wines. He acknowledges that he prefers England to India, but comes here simply through necessity. We are afraid the Maharajah will find India more unpalatable than he expects.—Jami-i-Jamshel.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF KILLING A MONKEY.—Since Sunday last a certain portion of Bhuleshwar has been the scene of great excitement in the Hindoo community. It is stated that a European police constable shot a monkey from the window of a Bania's house. The Hindoos are therefore very much incensed against this Bania who, not daring to face the public indignation, is a close prisoner in his house. The Vaishnav Maharaj has stopped the unfortunate man's Darsan and threatens to stop the Darsan of the whole Land caste should they not punish the monkey destroyer. A meeting of the caste was consequently held on Tuesday last, when it was resolved that the man Damodar should abide by whatever decision the Pandit Gatulaljee may give in the matter.—Gujerati.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb,
and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to
Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals
throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public
are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and élite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pearls and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by day-light, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

THE BROAD ARROW AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.

ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on especially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

OWING to the recrudescence of dacoity the Government are sending heavy reinforcements from India.

THE transfer of the Punjab Frontier Force from the local Government to the Commander-in-Chief has been virtually arranged, but some details still remain to be settled between the Commander-in-Chief and the Government of India.

IT is said that the Government contemplates the abolition of the post of Inspector-General of Artillery in India. Since General Leslie vacated it, the appointment has not been filled up. That of Brigade-Major to the Inspector-General would also be abolished.

THE fortifications at Aden are progressing very satisfactorily. Two hills are each to have a fort mounted with heavy guns and capable of holding out for two months.

A DIVORCE suit has been heard this week at Allahabad. The acting Chief Judge granted a decree, and awarded Rs. 13,000 damages against Colonel C. Macpherson, commanding the 2nd Leicestershire Regiment, the co-respondent.

AN action for defamation brought in the Bombay High Court against the vicar-general for the Northern Division at Goa, by a member of the Catholic Church at Versova, has resulted in judgment for the plaintiff for Rs. 100, with costs.

Notes of the Week.

THE number of visitors to the Colonial and Indian Exhibition for the week ending May 15 was 117,501; the total since the opening, 245,578.

THE Prince of Wales's telegrams, congratulating the authorities in India and the Colonies for the aid furnished to the Exhibition, have met with the genial response which the happy thought perhaps anticipated. Referring to the earlier telegram sent by his Royal Highness to the Viceroy on the subject of the Indian collections, the Calcutta Englishman remarked that the congratulations were by no means undeserved, as this was the first time that India had sent home anything like a fair representation of her products scientifically named and classified, the former collections drawn from the districts in a rough-and-ready fashion, having been sent home to be arranged and named "by English scientists who had little or no knowledge of India."

"THE result," says our contemporary, "can easily be imagined. On one occasion the South Kensington authorities, in despair, called in the aid of several Indian officers who had no special qualification for the work, beyond the fact that they were on leave, and were desirous of being employed. Thus was confusion worse confounded, and hence the strong disinclination on the part of the Royal Commissioners to employ Indian officers at the present Exhibition—an obstructiveness which at first gave rise to a good deal of unpleasant feeling."

THIS may have been so, and it must be allowed that the official gentlemen, European and Native, in India who formed the Executive Committees there deserve all the praise which has been given to them for the able and conscientious way in which they carried out their responsibilities. But the work which has had to be done in England has not been less arduous or deserving of commendation. The marvellous grouping and arrangement which have made the Indian exhibits such a success testify to the splendid way in which the labour has been continued and carried out here.

"HUMAN Nature," as interpreted by Mr. Augustus Harris, took a very pleasant way of showing itself on the evening of Thursday last, when the genial and popular lessee of "Old Drury" entertained on the classic stage of that theatre the Colonial and Indian Commissioners of the Exhibition. The guests were received with the proverbial sumptuous hospitality of the host, who may or may not have accepted Sir Cunliffe Owen's assurance, in his happy after-banquet speech, that the Exhibition was not a rival show to the theatres. The argument that the Exhibition drew many extra thousands to London could not be questioned, and the logical deduction from it was that more people visited the theatres—or, if not—they ought to.

It is certainly desirable that India and the Colonies should be united in many interests, but it will perhaps appear strange to some Anglo-Indians that a grievance of Indian officers should have to be taken care of in the House of Commons by an ex-Premier of Australia. Mr. Howard Spensley has given notice of a question to the Secretary of State for War as to whether any action is to be taken regarding the disadvantages as to pension and compulsory retirement under which officers of the Royal Engineers serving in India labour as compared with officers of the Indian Staff Corps. It is very good of Mr. Spensley, considering his knowledge of the subject, to take this matter up—but are there no M.P.'s in the House qualified to deal with Indian questions from the vantage ground of local experience?

THE tongue of rumour has often spoken strange things, but seldom anything stranger than the story that Sir Frederick Roberts was to be recalled from his Indian command in order to put down the expected Ulster rebellion headed by Lord Wolseley! The Secretary for War had gravely to assure the House of Commons that the latter officer had not expressed his intention of throwing up his commissions to lead an Irish revolution, and a military contemporary has thought it necessary to contradict the report regarding General Roberts. The whole tale is said to have originated amongst the Parnellite patriots, and, indeed, only a fervent Celtic imagination could have conceived the idea of England's two generals leading hostile forces of their fellow-countrymen, and rushing at each other in deadly combat. The ancient historical combat of the Kilkenny cats would have been considered a mild tragedy after this.

If the Times correspondent at Calcutta would utilise the hour allowed to him every Sunday at the telegraph office by wiring general news from India instead of his own opinions his telegrams would be more profitable reading. The telegram which we quote this morning reiterates the old rumour that the annual exodus of the Government to Simla is to be put a stop to, and then follows the opinion that this would effect great economy, &c., &c. It is natural for the Anglo-Indian community at Calcutta to desire that the Imperial Government should always keep its headquarters there; the tradesmen desire it, and so do the pleasure-seekers. But there are other interests and reasons to be taken into consideration.

It certainly would be better not to fix the head offices of the postal and telegraph departments at Simla, but at one of the great centres of commerce and trade—either at Calcutta or Bombay. The Viceroy and his advisers would, however, know very little of India if their movements were to be regulated by the wishes of the Calcutta or Bombay mercantile communities.

THE Murree Brewery Company having made enough beer at Quetta to last the troops until autumn has suspended operations at that place until August. At Ootacamund the company is turning out about 1,000 to 1,200 hhds. a month, and by the end of May, when the premises, &c., will be quite finished, the plant will supply 1,500 hhds. a month.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondent.)

CALCUTTA, May 16.

The Government has issued a long explanatory memorandum with a view to the removal of misconceptions regarding the loan lately raised in London. In ordinary circumstances this year's loan for productive public works would have been one of 350 lakhs of rupees, reducible to 275 lakhs by using half the famine grant, so as to reduce the amount to be borrowed. But having regard to the large number of famines, to the frontier railways under construction, and to the great importance of completing these railways, and the coast and frontier defences, within a limited time, the sanction of the Secretary of State was obtained to an increase of borrowing for the current financial year to the amount of 456 lakhs—equivalent to an exchange of eighteen-pence per rupee to £3,420,000. Other charges, chiefly of redemption and debit, and to meet the Eastern Bengal Railway debentures, raise the amount required to £5,000,000—or about the sum which the new loan will bring, after allowing for discount.

The Indian silver loan of 120 lakhs for the Calcutta and Bombay docks is quite separate, and will be raised in India, as announced in the Budget. There is no reason to suppose that the Indian Government or the Secretary of State will depart from the programme laid down in the Budget. The result of the £6,000,000 loan is considered highly favourable, and is generally held to indicate confidence on the part of British capitalists in the stability of Indian finance—a confidence of which the Government would do well to avail itself by launching the Bengal-Nagpore and other urgently needed railway projects.

The Finance Committee has, it is said, been asked to consider the expedience and economy of locating permanently at Calcutta or Simla the headquarters of the Imperial public departments; and a rumour is current at Simla that it has been already decided to locate the headquarters of the Post-office and Telegraph departments there. This rumour, however, is stated to be premature. That great economy would be effected by putting an end to the annual movements between Calcutta and Simla cannot admit of doubt. But whatever may be said in favour of permanently fixing the Government Secretaries and their offices at Simla, it would seem clear that the Postal and Telegraph departments should be placed at one of the great centres of trade and population. Calcutta would be an infinitely better place for those two departments than Simla; but perhaps Bombay would be still better.

Three Japanese military officers—namely, Captain Fukushima, of the Infantry, Lieutenant Tanouche, of the Engineers, and Dr. Suquenoya—have arrived at Calcutta, having been deputed to study the Indian military system. It appears that some time ago the Japanese Government inquired whether there would be any objection to its sending officers for this purpose. The Indian Government replied that there was no objection. Nothing more was heard of the matter till the officers suddenly arrived. They hoped to take part in the Camp of Exercise, but unfortunately they arrived too late. They have proceeded to Simla, visiting several military stations en route. After a short stay in the summer capital they will make the tour of the Bombay and Madras Presidencies and Ceylon.

Colonel Ward, a district officer in the Central Provinces, has been appointed Prime Minister of Bhopal. It should be distinctly understood, as statements to the contrary have been made by certain Native newspapers, that the Indian Government, far from forcing an English Minister on the Begum, was strongly of opinion that a Mahomedan State should have a Mahomedan Minister. With this view, when it became necessary to interfere in Bhopal affairs, some months ago, the Viceroy nominated as Prime Minister the Nawab Abdool Lateef, a gentleman who had lately retired after a long official career under the Bengal Government. He would seem to have discharged his duties to the entire satisfaction of the British authorities. The Begum, however, persistently asked for an English Minister; and in deference to her reiterated requests, the Nawab was relieved of his post, and Colonel Ward was appointed.

The installation of the Maharajah of Cashmere was celebrated with great pomp at Jummoo on Monday. The ceremony passed off successfully. The Indian Government was represented by Mr. Plowden, the Resident, who presented a formal letter recognising the new Maharajah, and offered the Viceroy's congratulations and presents.

The returns of the foreign trade of India during the past financial year, just published, show a trifling increase on the trade of the preceding year, but a considerable decline as compared with the trade of 1883-4. The exports of merchandise during the year were of the value of 8,380 lakhs of rupees, against 8,330 in 1884-5, and 8,812 in 1883-4. The imports of merchandise were of the value of 5,565 lakhs, against 5,570 in 1884-5, and 5,527 in 1883-4. These figures do not include treasure or Government stores. The gross import duty collected during the year amounted to 325 lakhs, of which 182 lakhs represent the salt duty. The gross export duty amounted to 74 lakhs. The import and export duties in the preceding year were 235 and 58 lakhs respectively, including the salt duty of 194 lakhs. The export duty was derived altogether from rice; and 50 lakhs of the total were contributed by British Burma, against 35 lakhs in the previous year.

The Bengal Government has resolved to follow the example of other Provinces, by publishing monthly forecasts of the principal crops. The first crop selected for report is jute. The Commissioners of the divisions where jute is grown are directed to select certain gentlemen who have the best means of information, and who will be asked to report to the Director of Agriculture both as to the area sown and the prospects of the crops. The information thus obtained is to be edited in the Director's office, in communication with the Chamber of Commerce and the Horticultural Society, and to be published periodically. The Indian Tea Association estimates this year's crop at 75,141,274 lbs., against 69,735,458 lbs. last year.

The Burmese war despatches were published in yesterday's Gazette, a resolution of the Governor-General in Council, recording his cordial recognition of the admirable services of General Prendergast and his troops. Another notification was published, bringing Upper Burma, except the Shan States, under the operation of the Act for the better Government of India, and thereby fully incorporating the new province in the Indian Empire. It is to be hoped that this step may be followed by some improvement in the state of affairs, which, as regards both Upper and Lower Burma, is in the highest degree unsatisfactory. The administration of the provinces needs thorough reform. The civil staff should be largely increased, and the Native police overhauled. The condition of the two provinces is rapidly becoming a scandal to the Indian Government, and the scandal will grow till the Government recognises that for the present economy must give way to efficiency of administration, and sentiment to vigour.

A large amount of illness, principally fever and dysentery, is reported among the troops in Upper Burma.

It is announced that the telegraph line from Moulmein to Myaddy, which is the British section of the Houlmein-Bangkok telegraph, was completed on March 25. The Siamese Government is vigorously pushing on the work in the section from Rabeng.

THE value of foreign merchandise—excluding treasure and Government stores—imported into India during the first eleven months of the official year just ended, was less by nearly one and a-half crores of rupees than the value of the imports during the same months of the year before. This falling off was mainly due to a great decrease in the imports of provisions, yarns and textile fabrics, and machinery and mill work. It is not uninteresting to examine the figures in detail, with a view to finding out whether the English community in India has been induced, by the low rate of exchange, to depend less on foreign countries and more on India for the supply of its needs. Take, for instance, "articles of food and drink." The total value of these imports during the eleven months was under 5½ crores, against over 5½ crores for the year before. On the whole, therefore, there was a decrease. The imports, however, of coffee, ale, beer, and porter, bacon and hams, and cheese showed an increase; though there is nothing to prevent all these articles being produced in India at a cheaper price than what they can be bought for if imported.

BOMBAY PARSEE CRICKET TEAM.—It will be remembered that in order to be coached a little prior to going to England, the Parsee cricket team engaged the services of Henderson of Surrey fame. This professional on the eve of his departure from Bombay has given his opinion on the merits of his pupils in a letter to the Times of India. He says:—"Before I leave Bombay I should like to say a few words about the Parsee cricket team I have had to coach for the last four weeks. I am pleased to say that they have improved considerably all round, but their great drawback is that they have no reliable wicket keeper, a most important man, and one who has a deal to do with the success of a team. In batting they are stronger than any other department of the game."

BEHAR INDIGO PLANTERS' ASSOCIATION.—At a meeting of the District Committee of the Mozufferpore Branch of the Behar Indigo Planters' Association, held at the Planters' Club, Mozufferpore, on the 23rd ultimo, the following objections to the Patwari Bill were recorded:—(1) That the principle is radically wrong, establishing, as it proposes to do, a large number of Government servants with enormous powers and facilities for fraud; (2) That the cess proposed to be leviable appears altogether excessive, and imposes a burden on zemindars and ryots which neither are in a position to meet, and in exchange for which no corresponding advantage can possibly accrue; (3) That the discretion given to the Local Government in the framing of rules under this Bill is excessive, so much so that it appears unnecessary to have gone through the forms of framing a Bill at all; (4) That no assurance is given that any opportunity will be afforded for the discussion of rules so framed. For the above, among other reasons, this Committee is of opinion that the Bill, as it now stands, should be opposed in the interests of planters, zemindars and ryots.

MR. PHIL ROBINSON has commenced in the Court and Society Review, to celebrate the opening of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition in verse, after the manner of Hiawatha. The "Queen-and-empress" is supposed to be addressing her son "Albert-edward":—

I would see my children gathered Round my wigwam in one household,
Look upon them, speak them kindly,
Tell them all how much I love them—
Tell them all how proud they make me;
See them happy here together,
See them strong in family union.

Clouds are gathered full of me: as,
Rumour rides in stormy chariots,
Fear of change perplexing nations,
Hoary traitors shake the triple Pillars of our British union.
Know you well that when the spirits
Call me to the Lake of Silence,
Call me hence to the Hereafter,
All my furs and all my wampum,
All the tributary treasures
Which my victor-sous have won me;
Girding the round earth with conquest,
Will be yours. And you must hold them Safe, as I have always held them
Bating neither jot nor tittle
From your high imperial station,
From your heirloom of the empire.
But because the times are troublous,
And the future dark with danger,
And the councils of the nation
Poisoned at their source with treason,
I would have you call your brethren
Here together, that my people
May take heart in time of peril,
Thinking of their stalwart kindred Ready with their lives to help them,
That the nations may take warning
From the gathering of the brethren.

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.—The Reception Committee recently formed by direction of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, Executive President of the Royal Commission, is desirous of offering a fitting and cordial reception to Colonial and Indian visitors of distinction during their visit to England by facilitating, so far as may be possible, their arrangements for visiting places of special interest in the United Kingdom. To enable the Committee to do this funds are required; and those who may be desirous of co-operating are invited to subscribe to the object in view. Subscriptions can be sent to the London and Westminster Bank, West-end Branch, St. James's-square, S.W., or to Mr. Arthur Hodgson, C.M.G., General Secretary, at the office of the Reception Committee, "Old London," Exhibition Buildings, South Kensington, or to Mr. H. Trueman, the Treasurer, Society of Arts, John-street, Adelphi. Cheques should be crossed "London and Westminster Bank," West-end Branch.

THE Indian Government pay to the Admiralty £70,000 for the service of five ships in addition to what is known as the East Indian Squadron. These five vessels are of the gunboat class; at least, that is the class for which the subsidy is paid, and their duty is to supplement the coastguard work which is performed by the regulation fleet. The arrangement, however, is becoming more honoured in the breach than the observance; and the sale of the Philomel, which is pronounced unfit for service, will still further vitiate the effective observance of the original arrangement. The Philomel is not likely to add much to the resources of "My Lords," as only £2,000 has been offered for her "all standing." The arrangement was made when the Indian Government gave up its fleet, and it will be curious to observe whether the place of the Philomel will be taken by a vessel sent out from England or Malta. As a matter of fact, she forms part of the British Indian squadron, so that a successor will have to be found.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to a military contemporary from Bangalore:—"I think the following facts only require to be brought to the notice of the authorities to be rectified, for it seems improbable that it can be known that a soldier actually loses money by depositing it in the regimental savings bank while serving in India; but such is the case. For the year ending 31st March, 1885, British troops serving in India received their English pay at the rate of 1s. 8d. per rupee, or Rs. 12 for every £1; for the year 1885-86 the rate was 1s. 7½d. per rupee, and for this year (1886-87) the rate is 1s. 7d. Now, a soldier who deposits, say, £1, or 12 rupees in the regimental savings bank in 1884-85, should he return to England this year will only receive 19s. on arriving at home, as his savings bank balance is transferred to England at the rate of exchange fixed for the year in which he leaves the country; he consequently loses one shilling in every pound deposited by him during that year, and sixpence in every pound deposited in the year 1885-86. A soldier at the best of times must be remarkably careful to save anything out of his pay, but to lose one shilling in the pound of his savings simply because it falls to his lot to serve in India seems rather hard. It would possibly entail much clerical work to keep the savings bank accounts to show the annual fluctuations in the rate of exchange, but there would be no difficulty if the entries in the savings bank ledgers were made in English money; this would be more satisfactory in every way, as a man would then know exactly what money he would receive on landing in England, and what is much more important, his hard-earned savings would not be decreased in proportion to the fall in the value of the rupee."

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

MATERIAL PROGRESS OF INDIA.

(Times of India.)

Not the least valuable portion of the Blue Book are two papers, one written by Mr. J. A. Baines on Agriculture and Agricultural Production, and the other a memorandum of prices by Mr. Pedder. Both these officers have proved that a civilian can at the same time be a good writer and a thoroughly efficient district officer. Mr. Pedder's departure was a severe loss to Bombay and the Presidency, but a gain to the India office. Both their papers display a virtue not often to be found in official documents, a thorough appreciation of the value of statistics treated in a scientific manner.

The material progress of India shows itself in many ways. Not only are more valuable crops grown for exportation, but the prices of agricultural produce have a constant tendency to rise. Mr. Pedder in his memorandum shows in a most lucid manner the causes which have led to this rise. He points out that after the general introduction of British rule a heavier duty was thrown upon the circulating medium by the extension of trade and cash payments than it could perform, and there was a great extension of cultivation and consequent increase of production. Hence prices steadily fell. But about the middle of the century, the foreign demand for Indian produce began to increase greatly, the first impulse being given by the Crimean and American Wars. In 1840-41 the total value of merchandise exported from India was less than 13½ millions; in 1864-65 it had risen to 68 million pounds; in 1882-83 to 83½ million pounds. English capital flowed to India to build the railways which have so increased her export trade. "In the forty years, 1841 to 1880, the gross imports of the precious metals exceeded £392,000,000, while bullion to the nominal value (at 2s. the rupee) of not less than £246,000,000 was coined at the Government mints. The result of this expansion of the currency, theoretically, should have been greatly to raise cash prices; and, in reality, as the diagram shows, this was what took place about 1866." Bajra was 42½ seers for the rupee in 1848, 21½ "in 1860. Paddy 38 in 1847, 27½ in 1859. Wheat was 41½ in 1815, 17 in 1860. The inference drawn from these figures must be as irresistible as they are obvious to persons whose minds are not warped by prejudice. The establishment of a settled government and the opening of the land by railways has increased the wealth of the agricultural population. The mineral wealth of India has not yet been developed. By employing the aid of science and the outlay of sufficient capital much will be done. No doubt the advance in prosperity has been attended with evils, but this is the result of all economic revolutions. We have ruined the weavers and destroyed the minor handicrafts, but by means of technical schools we must teach the new generation to use the forces of science for their own advancement.

KARACHI OR BOMBAY?

The establishment of a weekly steam service between Karachi and Aden, as recommended by the Karachi Chamber of Commerce, having failed to meet with the approval of the Director-General of Post Offices on financial grounds, the Sind Gazette remarks:—

The answer of the Director-General of Post Offices to the Karachi Chamber of Commerce that the existing European mail service is now worked at an annual loss of £68,000 to the Government of India, and that the establishment of weekly communication between Aden and Karachi would at the present mileage rate of the subsidy paid to the P. and O. Company more than double this loss, is altogether irrelevant. If the mails for India were despatched to Karachi direct, instead of to Bombay, as at present, a saving to the Government of India of one day's voyage and one day's expenses of the steamer, of wages, fuel, wear and tear, would accrue. It would be for Bombay to see that the mails delivered at Karachi, with this saving, were despatched so that as little delay as possible in their arrival at Bombay might take place. We might, perhaps, be even placed in railway communication with Bombay, an advantage in every respect. From this point of view the influence of Bombay might prevail in establishing a double line of ocean communication with Aden, though with a line of railway between Karachi and Bombay the latter port would get the mails via this port as early as at present. But we could leave the Director-General of Post Offices to fight the battle with Bombay with perfect equanimity, conscious that all Sind, the Punjab, and the North-Western Frontier would gain enormously in point of time, while the Imperial revenue would gain in economy. "So long," the Director-General says, "as the cost of the European mail service exceeds the value of the sea postage collected on the correspondence it conveys, I can, I fear, offer you no hope of subsidising an additional line of steamers for the benefit of Sind and Upper India." For this paragraph our scheme would substitute "for the benefit of Bombay." "One well organised line of communication between Europe and India is the most which the value of the entire correspondence affected would warrant." Very good, but the present line is neither well nor economically organised. As we have shown, the true line is from Aden to Karachi, cheaper, shorter, and better in India as a whole. Why should Bombay be unduly favoured by the line of steam communication being unduly lengthened to suit her? If economy is to be studied, as the Director-General of Post Offices would study it, Karachi is the line to take obviously as the cheapest, shortest, and best.

THE PLEA OF THE SIMLA DANCERS.

["The Punjab Government, with a ruthless disregard of the fair women and brave men who annually congregate in Simla for a season's enjoyment, has appropriated Benmore."—See to-day's Simla Letter.]

"What have we ever done to bear this grudge,"
Was there no room save only in Benmore
For docket, dustar, and for office drudge,
That you usurp our smoothest dancing floor?
Must baboos do their work on polished teak?
Are ball-rooms fitted for the ink you spill?
Was there no other, cheaper house to seek?
You might have left them all at "Strawberry Hill."

We never harmed you! Innocent our guise;
Dainty our shining feet; our voices low,
And we revolved to divers melodies,
And we were happy—but a year ago.
To-night, the moon that watched our lightsome wies
That beamed upon us through the deodars—
Is wan with gazing on official files,
And desecrating desks disgust the stars.

Nay! by the memory of tuneful nights:
Nay! by the witchery of flying feet;
Nay! by the glamour of ferdone delights;
By all things merry, musical and meet;
By wine that sparkled; and by sparkling eyes;
By wailing waltz; by reckless gallop's strain;
By dim verandahs; and by soft replies,
Give us our ravished ball-room back again!

Or—hearken to the curse we lay on you!
The ghosts of waltzes shall perplex your brain,
And murmurs of past merriment pursue
Your 'wildered clerks that they indite in vain.
And, when you count your poor provincial millio n,
The only figures that your pen shall frame,
Shall be the figures of dear, dead cotillions
Danced out in tumult long before you came!

Yes! "See Saw" shall upset your estimates,
"Dream Faces" shall your heavy heads bemuse;
Because your hand, unheeding, desecrates
Our temple—fit for higher, worthier use.
And all the long verandahs, eloquent
With echoes of a score of Simla years,
Shall plague you with unbidden sentiment—
Babbling of kisses, laughter, love and tears.

So shall you mazed amid old memories stand;
So shall you toil and shall accomplish naught;
And ever in your ears a phantom band
Shall blare away the staid, official thought.
Wherefore—and ere this awful curse be spoken,
Cast out your swarthy, sacrilegious train,
And give—ere dancing cease and hearts be broken—
Give us our ravished ball-room back again!—R. K.

HINDOO WIVES.

Whatever may be the merits of the case of Rakhmabai, lately tried in Bombay, there can be no doubt that an immense revolution is going on in the social organism of India at the present moment. The most remarkable features in the history of the past months have been the institution of at least three cases in which the wives of Hindus have come forward to claim protection from the selfish tyranny of the husband. We referred to two of these in a recent issue. The third came off in Mr. Amir Hossein's court on Thursday last. This time it is a live Rajah who figures as the defendant. The plaintiff is the Rani of Rajah Rukmini Ballava, and she complains that for the last twelve years or more she has been compelled to live apart from her husband in consequence of ill-treatment. The Rajah has married four times, and two of his wives are alleged to have died from the effects of ill-treatment at his hands. The Rani offered to go back, and if that was impossible, claimed maintenance. The case is going on, and we reserve our comments therefore. But we can deal with its social features with perfect safety. We may point to our reformers that without going so far as to endeavour to break the sanctity of marriages, they will find instances enough and to spare, in which husbands are known to systematically oppress and abuse their wives, in which husbands, much married already, fail to maintain their wives.

Certainly, if a combination could be made to bring these culprits before courts of law, an axe might be effectively laid at the very root of polygamy and infant marriages in India. These Calcutta cases are examples in point. Evidently, the wives did not require the aid of social reformers to get their grievances redressed. Their complaint was too real, their lot too unbearable, to allow them to remain deaf and dumb. But it shows one thing. It shows that the prospects of the sex in India are looking up. Female education is teaching our countrywomen their rights and privileges. If, under the circumstances, the social reformers could league together and help the powerless wives to claim the protection of the law, they would be doing more for the reformation of customs in India than would be possible by any other means which they could devise. The police cases we have referred to afford a striking index to the transition through which Indian society is passing at the present moment.—Calcutta Liberal.

THE VICEROY'S BURMA MEMORANDUM.

(Pioneer.)

An official communiqué, we understand, has been issued saying, what was tolerably obvious at first sight, that the Viceroy's Burma Memorandum, to which the Rangoon Gazette gave publicity, was never intended as a State paper. The mellifluous phraseology, and the official stateliness that garnish vice-regal public utterances, were conspicuously absent, and the substance, as well as the language of the Memorandum, was evidently confidential. The advice to take great care of the European troops during the hot weather was obviously not intended for the ears of the army at large, European and Native. The suggestion that perhaps it would be better to leave the more unhealthy districts during the hot weather unsubdued than to risk sickness among the troops could not have been meant to reach the ears of the inhabitants—dacoits and others—of those same unhealthy districts; while the detailed instructions as to measures for conciliating the Burmese people could only have been expected, by publication, to blunt the effect of such measures. The paper was in fact merely a sort of aide mémoire for the local authorities, dealing with current events as they then presented themselves for consideration, with directions and suggestions for their disposal.

THE PUNJAB UNIVERSITY.

The Punjab Gazette contains two long Resolutions by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. In the first, his Honour discusses the general principles on which the University was founded. The Resolution concludes as follows:—

Nothing has struck the Lieutenant-Governor more, in connection with this question, than the equally vague and reckless way in which it has been asserted that the wishes of the founders of the University have been systematically disregarded, and the general funds diverted from Oriental to English purposes, contrary to the wishes of the donors. No attempt is ever made to specify the improper purposes to which the general funds have been applied or the particular principles which have been violated. Projects, and even mere statements of opinion, put forward tentatively or for discussion at the earlier stages of the University Movement, and received at the time with more or less acceptance, are treated as if they constituted conditions morally, if not even legally, binding throughout all future developments of the question. The comparatively small sum contributed before the basis of action was finally agreed upon, and the dissatisfaction created by frittering away a considerable part of it on local schools under no properly constituted authority are not generally known. The unanimity with which the working basis was finally settled in public discussion is forgotten. The circumstances under which the large contributions were given by the Native Chiefs in political relation with the Punjab Government have never till now been made public. The fact is overlooked not only that the grant-in-aid given by Government is subject to express conditions, but that the sanction given to the establishment of the University College at all was a conditional sanction. Perhaps all this would not be of very much consequence were it not for the uneasy impression which the general accusations are calculated to beget that in some way or other the University has not held true to its principles. It is in order, if possible, to bring this vagueness and general assertion to the test of actual fact, that the Lieutenant-Governor has endeavoured in so much tedious detail to ascertain what are the real principles on which the University is founded, who were the original benefactors of the University, what was the amount of their contributions to the general fund, and what are the conditions to which those contributions are subject. And here cannot refrain from repeating his conviction, after a patient study of the history of the University from all available sources, that, if there has been any departure from the original intention of the founders, the wishes of the principal benefactors, or the conditions on which the University was sanctioned, it has been rather by neglect to give high English education that prominence, side by side with Oriental Classics, which was insisted upon from the outset by the warmest promoters of the University movement, by none more repeatedly or emphatically than Sir Donald McLeod himself. It has been by neglect to "guard against recurrence to the practically useless system pursued heretofore in the purely Arabic and Sanskrit institutions of the country," and by failure to fulfil the condition, insisted on by the Government of India, that "the teaching to be afforded through the medium of vernacular languages shall be free from the patent errors which prevail in ancient and even in modern vernacular literary and scientific work." It is only by purging out all known error from its teaching, and by restoring English to the place, side by side with Oriental study, which it was originally destined to hold and which the promoters of the University Movement by special resolutions on 23rd March and 25th May, 1868, determined it should hold that the Punjab University can prove true to itself and can hope to enrich the vernacular languages and literature and open up through their medium to the people of India the rich mines of European thought and culture. That it will yet attain to its high ideal, the Lieutenant-Governor does not cease to hope in spite of the bitter and utterly profitless controversies which have of late impaired its usefulness.

A GLIMPSE INTO FUTURITY.

The following speculations on changes have been communicated to a Calcutta contemporary. They may be unhesitatingly accepted as being neither more nor less truthful than hundreds of other prophecies:—

Colonel J. C. Berkeley, by accepting the Baroda Agency, has indirectly given up his lien on the Central Indian satrapy, which is going to fall vacant next year, in case, as is generally rumoured, Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.S.I., Agent to the Governor-General, Central India, succeeds Sir Rivers Thompson in the Bengal musnud at Belvedere. The apparent reason given out for Sir Lepel's accession to the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal is that Sir Lepel Griffin, being a strong man, is better suited to wheel the Bengalees down a line. Sir William Bannerman will, therefore, as a matter of course, get uncontested possession of the Indore Agency, and will thus have uninterrupted opportunity to check the eccentricities of Bala Sahab, while one of his powerful compeers is thus provided for at Baroda. But it is believed that Colonel Henderson's claims on the Indore Residency will be insuperably in the way of Sir Bannerman. But if Sir Edward Bradford vacates the Rajpootana Agency a year earlier, that obstacle in the way of Sir Bannerman will go away, as the Gwalior Residency has been the stepping-stone to the Central India Agency. Colonel Berkeley is a Political Officer of great experience and broad sympathies for the Natives. He was the right-hand man of Sir Henry Daly at Indore in 1867-70, and had a lion's share in initiating the educational policy of that great soldier administrator, which at last culminated in the establishment of the Raj Coomar College, Indore, of which the late Mr. Aberigh Mackay, better known as Sir Ali Baba, was the First Principal. Colonel Berkeley was First Assistant to Agent to Governor-General for Central India in 1867-70; Political Agent, Harrowti and Tonk, in 1871-78; Political Agent, Bhagelund, Rewah, in 1878-82; Resident at Gwalior in 1882-83; special Political Officer, Cashmere, in 1884; again Resident at Gwalior in 1884; Political Agent, Bundelkund, Nowgong, from January to April, 1885; British Resident at Khatmandoo from April, 1885, to April, 1886.

THE INCOME TAX.

A correspondent of one of the Bombay papers points out that the deduction of income tax from the interest payable on Government paper promises to become a source of very serious inconvenience to the mercantile community. He says:—

It will not only involve immense labour both to Government servants and to the public, but, as I shall hereafter explain, will create difficulties and complications of a most intricate nature. It appears to me that Government action in this matter can be attributable to one cause only, i.e., distrust, or want of confidence, in the public. Let me deal with a few of the difficulties and complications which arise from the course Government have adopted in promiscuously deducting income tax on interest on Government paper. It must be patent to everyone that if, as is the case, lakhs and lakhs of rupees' worth of Government promissory notes are perpetually changing hands, the deduction of the income tax from the accruing interest must involve very peculiar complications, and it seems extraordinary to me that our sagacious members of Government, when dealing with this important question, should so easily have overlooked the numerous difficulties it involves.

However, as I have already implied, it appears quite evident that Government were prompted in this matter by the greedy "bird-in-the-hand" principle, but I think there should be no difficulty in proving that the wisdom of their action, so far as its benefiting Government is concerned, can be seriously questioned, and that although by so wily an arrangement they prevent cheating or evasion of the tax to a certain extent, they, at the same time, leave it in the power of the public to falsify their returns and evade the tax in a manner which would otherwise not have been possible.

THE NEW FURLOUGH RULES.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

But, before electing, officers will do well to consider carefully Rule IX., which runs thus:—"The Secretary of State in Council reserves the right of making any change in the foregoing regulations which circumstances may require;" or in other words, an officer, after electing these rules, may, at the pleasure of a Sir Charles Wood, or a Duke of Argyll, find himself placed in a position far worse than any yet endured or possible under existing rules. For these words mean that nothing less than that, in accepting the new rules, the officer virtually relinquishes all guarantees and places himself unreservedly at the mercy of the Secretary of State for India for the time being. This is a most serious subject for reflection reverse of hasty. Officers who are disposed to accept these Regulations, without the intention of an early retirement, will do well to recall the past, to remember the ugly tricks that have been played upon Indian officers, and the more ugly ones which have been attempted by Secretaries of State. How many senior officers, who were entrapped into the Staff Corps, now regret their reliance on the promises of a Secretary of State, and indeed of the Indian Government? How many of those officers have been, by a monstrous breach of faith, impoverished and professionally ruined by the combined action of the Secretary of State, the Government of India, and Commander-in-Chief? Will younger officers place their future prospects in respect of pension and furlough pay unreservedly at the mercy of the Secretary of State? The rule we are discussing is an unwise one. It will possibly have the effect of damping the regulations; and it is unfair, being in the nature of a one-sided contract made by a powerful and unscrupulous master with a servant who can never resent a breach of the contract, however injurious and morally wrong.

THE BURMA EXECUTIONS.

A great stress seems to have been laid upon the question as to whether there was any unusual delay in giving the final death order of "Fire," and Colonel Hooper brought forward evidence to show that no further delay was made than that necessary to allow the firing party to take aim. His own explanation of the part he took, as photographer, is very frankly stated:—"Being anxious to obtain for a medical friend, on scientific grounds, a photograph of a man at the instant he was shot, I went to the place of execution, taking my camera with me, and some distance from the spot placed it in position, before the arrangements for shooting the men were completed, and stood by it till all was ready. The prisoners were blindfolded, and knew nothing of the camera being there. Not being present in my official capacity as Provost-Marshal, I was not in uniform, and Lieutenant Oswald received no directions or words of command from me other than a caution to make a proper pause between the words 'Present' and 'Fire.' The two pictures taken were instantaneous ones—one being taken a fraction of a second before the word 'Fire' was given, the other a fraction of a second after. No delay between the words of command was in any way requisite to suit the exposure." Mr. Moylan, the Times correspondent, whose telegram to that journal was the cause of this court of inquiry being ordered, was not present at the executions, but Mr. Melton Prior, the well-known artist of the Illustrated London News, was, and according to Mr. Moylan's evidence it was from Mr. Prior that he obtained the information, which he wired to London, to the effect that a delay took place between the commands 'Present' and 'Fire' for the express purpose of enabling Colonel Hooper to take the cap off the camera. "He also distinctly informed me," says Mr. Moylan, "that the officer commanding the firing party regulated the time of giving the word of command 'Fire,' by Colonel Hooper's movements in uncovering the camera." Mr. Moylan further states that he read over his telegram draft to Mr. Prior before despatching the message, and that that gentleman suggested only some slight alterations, which were adopted. Against this, Colonel Hooper handed in to the Court a letter from Mr. Melton Prior, in which he stated that he did not consider that a moment had been lost more than was necessary to allow the firing party to take aim. The curious part of the unpleasant business is that in the anxiety to explain that there was no delay in giving the words of command at the executions no explanation was attempted or asked for as to why the camera was there at all. Nobody appears to have thought that amateur photography, the artist being the Provost-Marshal himself, was a little out of keeping with the ghastly work then going on. Mr. Melton Prior, according to Mr. Moylan's evidence, said "he had seen much worse things done elsewhere, and he attributed the view I took of the case to the fact that I had not the same experience as he had as a newspaper correspondent." In reading this one can hardly help being reminded of Oliver Twist's first experience of burying a pauper, and the undertaker's assurance that he would grow to "like it" in time. Colonel Hooper is, however, very indignant with the Times correspondent for stating in his message that the photographs were failures. "This," said the Colonel, "is a fabrication and another misrepresentation. The negatives were good ones. The desire of the Provost-Marshal to obtain a photograph of a man at the precise moment when shot to death was one which Colonel Hooper appears to have had for some time. "He expressed," said Mr. Moylan, "this wish on board the Thambyadine, on the day the first battery was captured, and at the same time a photograph taken by Colonel Hooper was handed round the vessel. It represented a native trooper who had run amuck at Bangalore lying on the ground immediately after he had been shot, and apparently in the very act of dying."

A Provost-Marshal should doubtless be "a soldier armed with resolution," but whether he should also be armed with a camera for the purpose to which Colonel Hooper put his may be questioned. That the men executed were blindfolded may be accepted as showing a kindly intention to avoid shocking their feelings at such a moment, but what about the feelings of the soldiers and spectators who were not blindfolded? The extorting of a confession from a dacoit, under threat of immediate execution, was explained to the court in a very simple way: "After the second execution a Burman prisoner who had witnessed the execution was led up and interrogated by Colonel Hooper, and after he had been questioned several times without eliciting anything, Colonel Hooper ordered him to be placed against the wall and told him (through the interpreter) that if he did not confess he would be shot. At the same time a file of three or four men were ordered to advance and level their rifles at him. On seeing the rifles presented the prisoner said he would answer any questions." But—and here is the charming simplicity of the defence—"the rifles were not loaded." Had the prisoner known that fact a photograph of his expression gazing at the empty barrels might have been an interesting addition to Colonel Hooper's series of criminals in their last moments. That officer, however, has Mr. Melton Prior on his side in this matter also, as that gentleman writes to him: "I consider the fuss that has been made about the obtaining evidence from a known scoundrel, under threat of being shot, as also with the shooting dacoits, is perfectly ridiculous, and I am convinced that no special war correspondent would have taken the action that one or two outsiders have taken." It would thus seem that feelings must be educated by experience. Lord Dufferin, however, who is not without some experience of men and manners, has placed it on record in a memorandum which has just found its way into print, that "the photographing by the Provost-Marshal of prisoners in the act of being shot was a most lamentable occurrence. To endeavour to extract evidence from a prisoner under threat of death was a still more serious offence against the ordinary principles of justice." It is probable that public opinion—which has not had the hardening education of "special correspondents"—will, in England, at least, be on the side of Lord Dufferin.—Broad Arrow.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

HIS EXCELLENCY THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF reached Simla on Saturday, April 24th.

BRIGADIER GENERAL McQUEEN, C.B., at present commanding the Hyderabad Contingent, will shortly return to the Punjab, to take command of the Punjab Frontier Force.

LIEUTENANT A. C. YATE, 1st Biluchis, Attaché in the Intelligence Branch at Simla, has been appointed Secretary to the United Service Institution of India; a capital selection.

It is said that the Government contemplates the abolition of the post of Inspector-General of Artillery in India. Since General Leslie vacated it, the appointment has not been filled up. That of Brigade-Major to the Inspector-General would also be abolished.

CAPTAIN A. P. THORNTON, Cantonment Magistrate at Secunderabad, has been appointed Political Agent at Bhopawar.

SURGEON-MAJOR C. E. McVITTIE officiates as Residency Surgeon, Hyderabad, during Dr. Lawrie's absence on privilege leave.

It is notified that Police Probationers and officiating Assistant Superintendents can count their service towards pension, provided they have passed their examinations and have served two years, and exceed twenty-two years of age.

COLONEL MENZIES, Deputy Commissioner, Buldana District, will proceed on leave in June next, preparatory to retirement. It is considered likely that Lieutenant-Colonel Thompson, Assistant Commissioner, will receive the acting appointment.

THE issue of the new furlough rules will cause any amount of extra correspondence in the Military Department, owing to the loose way in which the rules are worded. For junior officers the rules are anything but a boon.

THE Government recognise brevet rank under the Income Tax rules by allowing brevet colonels and brevet lieutenant-colonels exemption on tentage, the former on Rs. 200 and the latter on Rs. 150, though Rs. 150 and Rs. 120, respectively, represent the tentage included in their pay and allowances of rank.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HALF HOURS WITH MUHAMMAD.*

"Half Hours with Muhammad" is, as we are informed by the Preface, designed to give, on the occasion of the opening of the Indian and Colonial Exhibition, "when the minds of millions of the inhabitants of the United Kingdom are being vividly directed to the wonderful Empire" of the Kaiser-i-Hind, "a concise and popular account of the religion of Islam, which is professed by upwards of one-fourth of the population of the countries watered by the Indian Ocean, and by not less than fifty millions of British Indian subjects." The book before us, which modestly claims to be a mere compilation, is an exceedingly well-digested narrative of the rise and progress of Islam up to the death—we ought rather to say the disappearance—of the last of the twelve descendants of Ali who held the Imamat (Muhammad Abu'l Kasim, destined, "according to the belief of some, to reappear as the Mahdi).† We have, moreover, a remarkably clear account of the more prominent doctrines of the Koran (or, as our author, in common with most Arabic scholars, spells the word, Quran) and of the distinctive tenets of the more important Islamic sects.

No one who has studied the sonorous periods of Gibbon, or the fascinating narrative of Washington Irving, will be wholly ignorant of the main historical facts which led up to the rise of the Muslim power. The indefatigable research of our own, and of Continental, Orientalists has, however, disinterred many additional facts which tend to place not a few events in a new light. And Mr. Wollaston would have done justice neither to himself nor to his subject had he not fully availed himself of these.

Popular, therefore, in the strictest sense, as the book is meant to be, and written, as it is, in an easy and fascinating style, the reader has the satisfaction of knowing that he has in all respects the "latest intelligence" on the subject of which it treats.

And the subject is one well worthy of far more consideration than it usually receives. The rise of Islam stands out almost alone in history. That a third of a century should not have elapsed from the day when the great Arabian Prophet was driven (A.D. 621) a fugitive from Mecca, to the time (Dec. 640) when the lieutenant of his successor Omar could laconically report "I have taken the great city of the west" (Alexandria) seems indeed incredible. We have here, not the military genius of a single commander, but a succession of rulers, each of whom went forth, either in person or by his generals, conquering and to conquer: invincible alike by Persians, by Greeks, by Romans, and by the barbarian conquerors of Rome.

The career of the founder of the mighty empire which obeyed the Khalifs is deserving of the very closest attention. Our author, in common with all Arabic scholars, is loud in his praise of the exquisite purity and felicity of diction which are so characteristic of the Quran: and it is not a little observable that Muhammad owed the elegance of his language to the accident of having been consigned, as an infant, to the care of a woman "from the desert," whose dialect was especially pure. "Verily," said he, "I am the most perfect Arab amongst you: my descent is from the Quraish, and my tongue is the tongue of the Bani Sad." Lingua Toscana in bocca Romana, it would seem. Clearly the Prophet was well aware "how much in his career was due to the beauty and sweetness of the language in which he clothed his thoughts, the expression of which gave life and vigour to the mission he proclaimed."

On this point a curious story is told. Some persons, desiring to discredit the Prophet, employed a man of "profound learning, unsurpassable eloquence, and vivid imagination to produce a book to rival the emanation of Muhammad's pen." Ibn al Muqaffa—so was the man named—claimed twelve months, during which his bodily wants were to be supplied, and himself left at leisure to concentrate his mind on his task.

"At the expiration of half the allotted interval, his friends, on coming to make inquiries as to his progress, found him sitting, pen in hand, deeply absorbed in study, while before him was a blank sheet of paper, and around his desk a wild confusion of closely-written manuscripts torn to pieces, and scattered indiscriminately over the apartment. In good truth he had tried to write a single verse equalling the Quran in excellence, and failed; and he confessed with confusion and shame that a solitary line had baffled all his efforts for six months, so he retired from the task hopeless and crestfallen."

† The sixteenth sign of the approaching end of the present dispensation is, according to Muslim tradition, "the coming of the Mahdi, or Director; concerning whom Muhammad prophesied that the world should not have an end till one of his own family should govern the Arabians, whose name should be the same with his own name, and whose father's name should also be the same with his father's name, and who should fill the earth with righteousness. This person, some sects, as has been previously stated, believe to be now alive, and concealed in a secret place, till the time of his manifestation; for they suppose him to be none other than the last of the twelve Imams, named Muhammad Abu'l Kasim."

What the Law and the Prophets were to the Jew, what Scripture is to the Christian, that, and we fear, much more than that, is the Quran to the Muslim. On this point Mr. Wollaston insists with well-justified severity. "Humiliating," he says, "as is the confession, it must be avowed that the simple trust and confidence of the Muslims, in their God proclaim, in language which is unmistakable, that, as regards fervour and honesty of purpose, the devotees of the West must give place to the worshippers of the East."

Nothing in this marvellous compilation is, indeed, more striking than the manner in which, by prescribing, it hallowes and sanctifies every act of daily life: and the accuracy with which its directions are, on the whole, followed. The variations in the text are singularly few, a circumstance attributable to the care of the Prophet's immediate successor, Abu Bakr, who caused to be collected and transcribed all the passages which had been committed to writing, or could be verified by the memory of Muhammad's immediate followers. The verses (as in various editions of our own Holy Book) have not always been divided alike; one version having 6,000, while another has 6,225, and yet another 6,236. But all are "said to contain the same number of words, namely, 77,639, and the same number of letters, namely, 323,015."

It is not a little curious to find how many precepts, supposed to be of the essence of Islam, are not to be found in the Quran. It is as great an error, for instance, to allege that Muhammad denied women souls as to assert that Englishmen sell their wives in Smithfield. Circumcision, to take another example, is not once mentioned in the Quran, possibly because it had been generally practised in Arabia before the Prophet's time.

The unity of the Deity, the spirituality of prayer, as depending on "the inward disposition of the heart, which is the life and spirit of prayer," and the duty of giving alms and of fasting, may be said (of course with the addition of the Divine Mission of the Prophet) to be the primary teachings of this wonderful book.

After a very clear account of the ceremonies attendant on the Mecca pilgrimage, which was ordered* by Muhammad, and a full description of the principal objects of note in that city, we have an interesting chapter on the tenets of the various sects of Islam; the Sunnis and Shias of course claiming the first notice, while the distinctive beliefs of the school of Ibn Malik, the "Low Church," of Ash Shafi, the "Broad Church," and of the Kharijites, the "Nonconformists," of the Musliman creed, all find their appropriate niches.

We have derived both pleasure and instruction from this book; and few will rise from its perusal without feeling that they have added not a little to their stock of knowledge on a most interesting and important subject.

THE MEMOIRS OF THE EMPRESS MARIE LOUISE.†

Given an Emperor, crushed under the iron heel of a relentless conqueror, who loves his family much, but his country more; a daughter, about to become the loathing bride of the victor—for she loved her Fatherland first, and herself after, and possessed the noble power to do and to suffer, shown by her kinswoman Marie Antoinette on the scaffold,‡ and, later on, by her kinsman, the Emperor Maximilian—and you have the House of Hapsburg after the fearful artillery duel and carnage at Wagram.

Turn from the future bride and the father-in-law to the bridegroom; a military genius of the first order, a man whose one word could annihilate the Empire, a parvenu, just sufficiently vulgar and brutal to be unable to see that he was but accentuating his own vulgarity and brutality by wantonly humiliating a fallen, yet gallant, foe, in the person of his favourite daughter, a commander so great as to have been thus far unconquered in battle, an administrator so remarkable as to have been rarely surpassed, yet superstitious (p. 264), devoid of every generous instinct, and, as a man, utterly contemptible, and you have before you the future husband of Marie Louise, Napoleon Bonaparte.

We have rarely met with a book which, though written all but

* It is a duty towards God, incumbent on those who are able to go thither, to visit this house." [Becca or Mecca.]

† "The Memoirs of the Empress Marie Louise," from the French of Imbert de Saint-Amand. London: Remington and Co. 1886.

‡ Marie Antoinette, as is well known, after being, for two hours or more, exposed to the ribald insults of a mob, coarse and bestial as only a French mob can be, mounted, with a firm and even step, the scaffold whither her wretched Bourbon husband had a few months previously been borne shrieking.

avowedly from the Napoleonic point of view, conveys so good an idea of the Court life, both of Vienna and of Paris, at the period with which it deals.

Marie Louise, Archduchess of Austria, was born in 1791. Napoleon, who had no children by his marriage with Joséphine, had begun to feel that people were speculating on the possibility of his early demise, whether by illness, on the battlefield, or by assassination—of attempts at the last he had had personal experience—mattered not. In whichever event, his Empire, weighed down by the execration of all Europe outside France, would fall to pieces even more speedily than that of Alexander the Great. He must consolidate and perpetuate his dynasty. He must get rid of Joséphine, and find a wife from whom a future heir could be hoped for. The marriage was (p. 87), as he himself says, purely political. But no female of his own class would do. It was decreed by the then arbiter of the European Continent, that nothing under an Archduchess would suffice; and to Imperial houses alone were any serious overtures made, though it would seem that Saxony was led to hope that one of the fair-haired daughters of her Royal house might—as a pis-aller—grace the Imperial throne of France. Napoleon first tried Russia; and it is curious to reflect how his possible success in this direction might have changed the entire history of Europe. Mated with a Russian Princess, the great king of men would probably have had no Moscow, no Leipsic, no Elba, no Waterloo, to experience. But the Tsar was not so easily caught. Like the proud Rulers of Oodeypoor, whose boast it is, that they never gave a daughter to the circumcised conqueror, he temporised, until Napoleon, waxing impatient, closed with the other possible alliance, that of a daughter of Austria, and did so in such hot haste that the Austrian Ambassador, casting aside his Teutonic partiality for circumlocution and ceremony, had to sign the marriage contract, at a day's notice, before having received any definite instructions on the subject.

Poor Marie Louise, who had been brought up generally to detest France, and all things French, behaved herself nobly. She said, on the proposal being made to her (p. 102), "I only wish what my duty commands me to wish. When the interests of the Empire are at stake, they, and not my will, must be consulted:" an expression of resignation which can best be appreciated in the light of her subsequent remark, "I was sacrificed."*

With the details of the marriage ceremonies, three times repeated—once at Vienna, and then by a civil, followed by an ecclesiastical wedding at Paris—we need not weary our readers; but ladies will find (p. 201) all the details of an endless procession, and in many places accounts of dresses so elaborate as to require photographing before they can be understood by "only a man."

Naturally enough, Napoleon displayed the usual fondness of a parvenu for insisting, to a marvellous extent, on forms, ceremonials, and all the infinitesimalities of etiquette. The last Archduchess of Austria who had been given to the French was the unhappy Marie Antoinette: she had been allowed in her suite (p. 107) "six ladies of the Palace and six Chamberlains." But she, poor thing, was only to marry a Dauphin, who could at best become a King; whereas Marie Louise was to be the Consort of a real live Emperor. Wherefore, "the future Empress will have twelve of each:" not to say that all precedents were ransacked in order that her reception, and her entourage, should surpass those of her predecessor.

Once in France, Marie Louise was not thought of as the great-niece of the "Messalina," poor Marie Antoinette, but was appreciated at her own value, and the story of her life there, as given in Chap. VII., is particularly pleasant reading. Yet it is clear that she did not love (p. 357) her husband; nor he her. "What he especially loved in her was the Archduchess, the daughter of the German Cæsars, and in the sentiment with which she inspired him there was probably more self-love than true love."

Marie Louise, on Napoleon's fall after Leipsic, remained at the Tuileries to the very last, and something more than gentle compulsion was needed to induce her to leave the home of her husband, whom she never again saw. After his death she married, as is well known, a second and a third time; but is thenceforth lost to history. The work before us, indeed, carries the detailed narrative of her life only up to the period when Napoleon tempted Providence by fighting, in the Russian expedition, against the elements, rather than against men; but the Introduction gives a brief, yet adequate, account of the later years of Marie Louise, and of the death of her only son, the Duc de Reichstadt, or, in French parlance, Napoléon II.

The book, which will be, and deserves to be, very extensively read, is written in a clear style, and with no lack of animation. But one feels that its real subject is Napoleon. Few are the French writers on the events of the years 1790-1814 who have escaped the fascination which, to so large a proportion of the nation, still attaches to the name of this remarkable man; a man, too, not even of French extraction. For the great commander, M. de Saint-Amand's admiration—we ought to say veneration—knows no bounds. For instance, Marie Louise "had the eyes (p. 8) of a dove, and she needed the eyes of an eagle to enable her to gaze on the face of this imperial sun, whose burning rays dazzled her . . . . Her Majesty is not free from the timid respect which her august husband imposes on all who have the honour to approach him" (p. 329). Of her son, too, we read, that he was painted "playing with a cup and ball, the stick of which he might have taken for a sceptre, and the ball for the world's globe, fitting toys for his infancy" (p. 29). "Like an eagle flapping its wings before taking wing to soar in the clouds, the heir of Napoleon looked the sun in the face" (p. 38), and so on.

* Of this Napoleon's General, Ségur (though (p. 205), seeming to admit that victory had been pushed too far), with true Gallic chivalry, openly boasted: speaking (p. 167) of ladies "being compelled in their turn to pay in their sex, in the person of the Princess sacrificed to our good fortune, the cost of the war."

The translation is written in easy and flowing English, and is, in this respect, most commendable, as being vastly superior to the average run of translations. But we could mark not a few passages in which French books usually reveal, but which may well be excised in a work otherwise quite worthy to lie on an English drawing-room table.

A BRIEF SKETCH OF THE FIRST FRENCH REVOLUTION.*

This little brochure, narrating the horrors to which democracy led, in France, during the first Revolution in that country (since which, as Bismarck truly said, it has never had a Government as stable as a cock-boat), well deserves perusal, if only that the reader may learn to what a state of things that worst of tyranny—the tyranny of the unfittest—may bring a nation. What this can be, and was, no one who has read the excellent life of Madame Roland,† so recently reviewed in our columns, can doubt. Our only complaint against Mr. Macdonald is that he scarcely states his case strongly enough. Mere lust for blood has always been a distinctive mark of Celtic races, and from the time of the Jaquerie downwards of the French in particular. But our Author should have gibbeted the brutality, far worse than mere slaughter, of exposing, in a state of absolute nudity, women—some of them ladies of the highest position—tied, back to back, to men, previously to throwing them into the nearest river. Yet he has drawn a most useful moral from the narrative of the events of the Revolution. He has shown how speedily, and by what all but imperceptible steps, concessions made to the democratic element come to be used as a fulcrum to upset the whole status of society; and how violence leads to greater violence, until, at length, the common sense of mankind revolts; the pendulum swings, and, from mob-law, one comes to a military dictatorship, the most autocratic form of rule, the most regardless of private rights, which the world has known. Rightly and opportunely does he warn England, which is on the brink of a fatal decline, how easily the first false step towards a social cataclysm, and towards national ruin, is made, and with what fearful rapidity its results are made apparent.

No. 2 of "Sell's Directory of Registered Telegraphic Addresses" continues to supply a want much felt in the mercantile world. The value of the first edition was immediately recognised on its appearance, and the result has been that some 12,000 firms have had their addresses inserted in the present issue. No charge is made for entry of name, so all firms are asked to send in not only their own but any other registered addresses of their friends. The work is published quarterly at the very moderate price of one shilling. "Sell's Telegraphic Code," containing 4,000 general business sentences, has already run to a second edition, and is used by many firms in connection with the Directory.

"THE Colonies and India," a reprint from the well-known "Newspaper Press Directory" of Messrs. C. Mitchell and Co., of Red Lion-court, will be found by British Manufacturers and Exporters to be a very useful compilation, affording them in a concise and interesting form every information concerning the Colonies and India as fields for commercial enterprise. The portion of the book relating specially to India is carefully and intelligently written, and shows how that country is foolishly neglected by British merchants. "British traders have not yet learnt how good and profitable a market India affords, and may to a greater extent afford in the future. The magnitude of our commerce with India, the rapidity with which it has grown within the past generation, the circumstances which have led to this increase, and the causes which make it probable that in years to come the export of goods from England to India will become greater, have yet to be fully realised by the most enterprising of the world's merchants—the Anglo-Saxon man of business."

RECRUITS IN INDIA.

A COMPLAINT comes from India by the present mail which ought to attract the attention of the military authorities here. Not long ago there were comments in several of the home journals regarding the cruelty inflicted upon time-expired soldiers shipped from India in pleasant enough weather there, but landed in England during the coldest and rawest months of our island winter. This arrangement is unfortunately, to a certain extent, unavoidable, as these soldiers have to be collected from all parts of the three Presidencies, and it is better that they should journey through the plains to the port of embarkation during the temperate cold weather of India than during the summer heat. It would be difficult to manage so that on their arrival in this country they would find balmy air and comfortable temperature awaiting them. Our wonderful climate would upset all attempts to please in this way, for February might one year be as genial a month as the merry, merry May of the poet's song, whereas the merry May might that year be as cold and blustering as the traditional March. To keep the time-expired at some agreeable sanitarium until the mildness of an English spring was assured might not suit the temper of the men anxious for their discharge, and the expense would not suit the framers of the military budget, who would have to account to the taxpayer for the extra cost. The only way, perhaps, of meeting the difficulty is to have care taken that the men on landing here are provided with suitable clothing, and sent to their respective homes or destinations well provided with all that is necessary for their health and comfort as soldiers returning from foreign service.

But it is a different matter with recruits going to India, and the complaint which comes to us from that country is a more serious one, although easier, we think, of remedy. An Anglo-Indian contemporary points out very forcibly the hardships which arrest the recruits now on their arrival in India : " In March and April the hot weather is already upon us, and the heat is daily becoming more and more oppressive. Yet these two months see a large number of boy-soldiers landed in Bombay and sent off up-country to join the various regiments to which they belong. Even now in the middle of April the Jumna is arriving in Bombay with some eleven or twelve hundred men on board. It is true that a large proportion of these compose one regiment, for which a station in a magnificent climate has been selected, but the remainder are drafts, and as such are probably lads of twenty or thereabouts. It is positive cruelty to send these young men out to face, at the very outset of their tour of foreign service, the scorching heat of an Indian summer. But it is more than cruel ; it is unbusinesslike, for the article must deteriorate from such usage, if it be not ruined." All who have had any experience with soldiers in India must fully endorse this opinion. An English recruit when he lands in India is already a costly article of Government, and it is only a wise economy which suggests that he should be taken care of. Military hygiene is certainly better understood and attended to in India now than it was formerly, when in the forty years between 1815 and 1855 there died of European soldiers belonging to Her Majesty's and the East India Company's army there very nearly 100,000 men, the greater portion of whose lives might have been saved if better precautions had been taken with regard to health. But there is still room for improvement. It would surely be better, as our contemporary suggests, to land young soldiers in India at the close of the hot weather, with the whole winter before them and the days hourly growing cooler, than as now to throw them at once into the furnace of an Indian summer. This surely could be done by starting the troopships from England, laden exclusively with drafts, earlier in the season. It is true that the military authorities in India are arranging to send as many as possible of the young soldiers to the hills on their first arrival, but it may not always be compatible with the exigencies of the Service to do this, and the simpler and cheaper plan certainly seems to be to start the troopships earlier from England, so that the recruits may arrive in India at the commencement, and not at the close of the cold weather.

Another complaint is that the recruits on landing are put under stoppages for the clothing required by a tropical climate—or if they have any savings, they must pay for this out of them. A man enlisted in India receives a sum sufficient to meet this extra expense for light kit and clothing, and why should not the recruit brought from England be treated equally liberally? This is the question which the latter naturally asks himself, and which the authorities might reply to in a generous spirit. Their desire must be to make the Service popular, and to keep the soldier in health and contentment as an efficient fighting machine, and the best way to do this is to look into grievances which seem to be real ones, and remedy them if possible.

UPPER BURMA.

NOTWITHSTANDING the pessimist views which are being taken by certain writers regarding the effect of annexation, the truth is that signs of peace and improvement are quickly following the outbursts of lawlessness and dacoity which have been so severely commented upon by those moralists who saw much virtue in King Theebaw's rule. Here is the present situation as told by an Indian writer likely to be quite as well informed as any "gentleman of the Press" in Fleet-street:—

In Upper Burma distinct progress can be pointed to. We command at least the great waterways of the country, and there are no longer any considerable bodies of men collected to oppose us in the field. The recent outbreaks at Mandalay, though harassing enough, are very different to the attacks which were made on the troops in the open field a month or two ago. But with the breaking up of military bands, the dacoity system is not by any means extinguished. It will flourish vigorously in the very neighbourhood of large garrisons, if these have no hold of the country; and it is to be feared that our hold of the interior is as yet very slight. There is small use in sending out flying columns on the report of each particular outrage, that they may arrive to find the dacoits dispersed, and withdraw, to bring them back again upon the unfortunate villagers to take vengeance for having sent the news. It would seem that the time has come for the modification of our system to suit the altered circumstances. Large flying columns and expeditions are no longer required, but what is wanted is a thorough network of small military posts, wherever the country is at all disturbed. From thirty to a hundred men is the sort of strength needful, and each would command a circle of about fifteen miles. Native troops are, of course, more fitted for work of this kind than British—which are not meant for dacoit-hunting—and a local force would be better than regular Native troops. Such material will be forthcoming in the new military police; but whether their numbers will be at all adequate for the work to be done is another question. With the large number of Native troops, however, in the country to draw upon dacoity ought surely to be repressed before long if a proper system of dealing with it is pursued. The public have a right to look for nothing less than this. Frontier troubles are, of course, another matter altogether. They are not to be averted when we take a new border that brings us into contact with new tribes; they have already begun to appear, and unless we are very unusually fortunate they will develop in due season.

It is considered probable that the state of General Hughes's health will probably necessitate his taking early leave to England.

THE Saturday Evening Journal of Calcutta, referring to the past Calcutta season, says:—"There has not even been a presentable sensation! How things have changed since the merry days of Lytton, and how tame our life seems now! No delightful scandal, no thrilling divorces, no amusing breaches of promise, no romantic elopements. The guiding rule used to be to hate our neighbour and to love our neighbour's wife. Now our affection is a poor, vague, sexless sentiment which hardly rises above the level of affectation, and which delights not in man nor in woman either."

THE Indian military expenditure during the past year has been increased by the cost of the Delhi Camp of Exercise. The actual cost of the camp, it is expected, will very considerably exceed the round sum of £100,000 at which it is estimated. Certain charges connected with the Rawul Pindi Camp are brought into the past year's accounts, and amount to the respectable figure of £50,000. Then the purchase of remounts consequent on the reorganisation of the Royal Horse and Field Artillery batteries comes to £90,620; and a share of the £151,473, which is the cost of the additional British and Native troops in India, falls upon the year.

THEEBAW sent some of his precious stones into the bazaar a few days before his departure from Madras, but, judging from the vast difference between the values put upon them by local experts and the amounts asked for them by the ex-King, it must have been only a case of "feeling the market." Some pearls were sold, but some good rubies only drew offers of about one-fourth of Theebaw's price. A Rangoon paper says:—"Rubies are not likely to maintain their present high value when the Mogoung ruby mines are properly worked by machinery. Whether they are destined to experience such a fall in value as the finding of diamonds at the Cape caused in those stones, remains to be seen. But there is little doubt that, when once the Mogoung mines are scientifically worked with machinery, the finds are likely to be very much larger than when a few Burmans and Shans simply tickled the earth with bamboos, and yet got valuable stones."

A NEW FLOOR DECORATION.—Messrs. Hurry, "Toulmin and Gale," of 47, Cornhill, the well-known importers of crocodile leather for travelling bags, &c., have recently further utilised that material as a floor covering, for which purpose it possesses many undeniable advantages, viz., attractive appearance, combined with great durability and comfort. Being a natural skin and porous, it is warm and comfortable to the feet, free from the disagreeable tiring effects found in the present floor coverings, very easy to keep clean, and presenting an appearance of fine Spanish mahogany, which will undoubtedly commend itself for use in baronial mansions, halls, dining and billiard-rooms, &c., the flooring in their establishment being covered with the same, and is well worthy of inspection. Colonial and Indian visitors should certainly inspect this new floor decoration.

COLONEL C. WALTON, C.I.E., the Presidency Army Clothing Agent, and for many years Commandant of the Calcutta Volunteers, has left India nominally on a furlough for one year. He will not, however, return again, as at the expiry of his leave he will be entitled to colonel's allowances. During his command of the volunteers, Colonel Walton was very popular with both officers and men, and as a token of their regard they had invited him to a farewell dinner, which, however, he had to forego on account of the state of his health. On his retirement, he received the following letter from the Secretary to the Government of India in the Military Department:—"Sir,—As you are about to leave India on furlough, and will shortly succeed to colonel's allowances, which will involve your vacation of the appointment of Superintendent and Agent for Army Clothing, Bengal, which you have held for seven and a-half years, I am desired by the Government in Council to express to you the cordial approbation of the Government of India for the zeal and energy you have displayed during your tenure of the appointment, and for the good service you have rendered to the State." All who knew Colonel Walton will agree that the compliment is thoroughly deserved.

THE "TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST."

As a medium for English, American, and Australian ADVERTISEMENTS of goods suitable for the tropics, India, as well as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Java, and West Indies (Central America being included in that term), or connected with agriculture, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST stands unrivalled, the work being constantly in the hands of Native as well as European and American agriculturists. Being a Monthly Periodical, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST lies on the table and is very often referred to during each month, a fact which advertisers will know how to appreciate.

Mr. W. T. Thiselton Dyer, F.L.S., C.M.G., Assistant Director of Kew Gardens, writing of the T. A., refers to it as "an astonishing repository of everything relating to the economic botany of the East."

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Ceremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D., M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary
of the Church Missionary Society,
Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Muhammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary World.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr. Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopædia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammadan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . . We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Mussalman faith, the information being in every case taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars. . . . This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Home and Mail.

A GAZETTEER

OF THE
TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT

VICEROY OF INDIA.

BY

EDWARD THORNTON.

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE, C.I.E.

(Formerly Press Commissioner in India, &c.),

AND

ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E.,

H.M. INDIAN (HOME) SERVICE.

(Translator of the Anvār-i-Subailf, &c.)

WHEN Thornton's "Gazetteer of India" was originally presented to the public, it was the only compilation of its kind, and it was obviously desirable that, within reasonable limits, the work should be sufficiently comprehensive to give the reader some insight into the history of the various localities enumerated. Since that date, however, Hunter's "Imperial Gazetteer" has been prepared, which is not only much more ample than its predecessor, but is still to be greatly enlarged in the New Edition now in course of production. In these circumstances it has been thought incumbent, when issuing a New Edition of Thornton's "Gazetteer," corrected up to date, to modify in some measure the plan of the work by omitting much of the detail, and giving only such leading facts and figures as will suffice for ordinary purposes of reference, a plan which has the additional advantage of reducing the work to one moderate-sized volume.

It is obvious that the value of the New Edition must depend in a large measure upon the care and judgment which have been exercised in the preparation of the letter-press. The task was, in the first instance, undertaken by Sir Roper Lethbridge, whose literary attainments and acquaintance with India were considered to qualify him to a marked degree for an undertaking demanding considerable knowledge and experience. In order, further, to render the work as complete and perfect as is possible, the Publishers deemed it prudent to subject the pages to the scrutiny of a second Editor, in the person of Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, whose lengthened experience gives to his criticism an unusual degree of weight and importance. The joint names which appear on the title-page will, it is hoped, serve as a guarantee to the public that the "Gazetteer" is in the main accurate and trustworthy, free alike from sins of omission and commission. It will be found to contain many hundreds of place not included in any former edition, while the areas and populations have been revised by the data given in the Census Report of 1881.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb,
and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals
throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public
are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially designed to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon
the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy
of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars,
and, judging from their sale, we fancy
their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia,
the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœas, and even in the more terrible forms
of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form
of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis
Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies.
It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies,

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 24, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 7th May; from Calcutta and Allahabad to the 5th May.

THERE does not appear to have been any improvement in the state of Burma during the past week.

THE dacoits are undoubtedly increasing in daring and audacity, and are doing much mischief not only in the interior of the country but in the capital itself.

TWO serious fires occurred at Mandalay on April 30th—one within the city walls and the other in the suburbs.

FOUR thousand houses, including the Chinese and Siamese bazaars, and the Post office and records were destroyed.

THE military were helpless to extinguish the flames, though they did good service in pulling down houses to check the progress of the flames.

THERE was no plundering, rioting or shooting.

IT is reported that the dacoits have also burnt the towns of Yankintaung and Madaya.

LIEUTENANT FORBES, of the 11th Bengal Infantry, has been killed while defending a convoy near Hlinedat.

NO great political importance is attached on the spot to the collision with the Kachins, as only one Tsahbwa, or Chief, had shown any hostile spirit.

THE hutting arrangements for the troops in Burma are well advanced, in anticipation of the rains.

COLONEL H. S. ANDERSON, 1st Bombay Grenadiers, has been appointed to command a Brigade in Upper Burma, consequent on the augmentation of the force there.

MR. A. T. CRAWFORD, who received Theebaw at Rutnagiri, is now on a visit to Simla, where arrangements will be shortly made regarding Theebaw's allowance.

THE Tibet Mission will assemble at Darjiling about the middle of this month, by which time Mr. Colman Macaulay will have returned from England. It is hoped the Mission will be able to start at the end of May.

THE escort for the Tibet Mission will consist of fifteen sowars of all ranks of the 13th Bengal Lancers and sixty men of the 23rd Pioneers, all under the command of Captain Gwatkin.

IT is rumoured that the Gackwar of Baroda contemplates paying a visit to England this summer.

THE Marine Court, which has been inquiring into the circumstances connected with the loss of the British ship Oopen on the coast near Mangalore, has suspended the captain's certificate for twelve months.

MR. JUSTICE WEST and Mr. Justice Nanabhai Haridas have given their decision on the Broach Riots appeal. Their lordships did not think there was evidence to support the idea that there was a widespread conspiracy against the Government in the Broach district, whatever might have been the intentions and aspirations of the leader of the rioters.

IN addition to proceeding by a criminal prosecution against the editor and printer of the Statesman for defamation, Mr. J. de Barch Miller, manager of the Burdwan Raj, is instituting a civil suit against the Paikpara Raja as proprietor. The damages are laid at a lakh of rupees.

THE HON. BUM BEHAY REPUR, the joint manager of the Raj, is also proceeding by civil suit.

MR. F. E. ROBINSON, head Assistant Collector of the Kistna district, Madras Presidency, has been killed by a tiger.

IT is intended to remove the Byculla Club from Bellasis Road, Byculla, to Chowpatty.

THERE is no truth whatever in the statement that the Finance Committee have voted themselves Rs.15 per day as an allowance in Simla. The members will get no special allowance, but when travelling will draw the usual grants according to their official standing.

IT is believed that the serious difficulties said by the Home papers to have cropped up between England and China on the Burma Boundary question have been much exaggerated. All information which has reached the Government of India points to the belief that the negotiations are proceeding satisfactorily.

IT is understood that Colonel Ross, the acting Resident, Hyderabad, proceeds to Simla about the middle of the month.

THE Commander-in-Chief's inspection of the Khyber Pass is understood to have been satisfactory. One result may be some modification of the existing scheme of frontier defences in the Peshawur direction.

THE Bolan Railway has been for some time completed through the Pass; and now, in order to open up the country beyond Darwaza, at the northern end of the Pass, as soon as possible, material is being rapidly carried up, and the line is being laid towards Quetta on the earth-work which had been already prepared.

MR. R. H. SINCLAIR, Police Magistrate at Kandy, was drowned on the evening of the 27th ult., while attempting to swim across the Kandy lake, and a soldier was drowned in endeavouring to recover the body.

FROM the latest information received it appears that all is well with the Gilgit Mission, and that Colonel Lockhart is again preparing to move forward.

Notes of the Week.

MR. GLADSTONE is likely to have an Indian Home Rule party to conciliate if he continues to delay the settlement of his Irish Bill much longer. The Babus will soon be on him judging from the following, culled from a native paper:—

Shall we now sit down indifferently while Mr. Gladstone retraces his steps? Mr. Gladstone was adored in this country as a god, and we are unable even to imagine what the people of India will say of his weakness. Let villages and towns awake. North, South, East, and West, men and women, educated men, and the cultivators, awake and let all of us make our grievances known before the Parliament. There should be no delay in making efforts in this direction.

THE bi-metallists have not yet solved the question of the depreciated rupee, although the controversy is continued as hotly as ever. Bi-metallism, assuming it to be started on the basis of an artificial ratio of value between the two metals favourable to silver; or that, having been started on a just ratio, it maintained that ratio in the future in spite of a further fall in the value of silver, would be a glorious thing for India and other countries possessing large stocks of mines of gold or silver. But it would be a glorious thing for them, only through being a correspondingly injurious thing to England and other countries possessing large stocks of gold or being gold creditors. It would amount, in fact, to a transfer of so much purchasing power from the one metal to the other, i. e. from gold to silver. What one would gain the other would lose. The total purchasing power of the two cannot be increased by any change in their relative values, and that being so any increase on the one side can only come out of a corresponding decrease on the other.

THERE is no getting out of this difficulty. Any advocate of bi-metallism who is interested in silver may reasonably be suspected of being "too clever by half;" any advocate of bi-metallism who is interested in gold may safely be set down as "not being clever enough by half."

It is reported that there will be no distribution of honours in connection with the Burmese campaign until the military authorities here have had an opportunity of consulting Sir Harry Prendergast on the subject. A "Gazette" will then appear in due course.

HONOURS will have come too late, however, for one gallant officer who was engaged in that campaign, viz., Brigadier-General Foord, whose sudden death at Bombay we have already recorded. He would have been gazetted a C.B. had he been spared a little longer.

THE Broad Arrow calls attention to the appearance of a new paper published in French territory in India, and devoted to the abuse of the Government of India in English:—

The little French town of Chandernagore, about sixteen miles from Calcutta, has, since the beginning of the present century, been a place more ornamental than useful to the Power which owns it. It could be captured in about ten minutes by a force hardly exceeding the strength of a corporal's guard, but French vanity retains possession of it, declining to part with it to the British for any pecuniary consideration, and so the tricolour flag still waves over the Governor's house and his army of half-a dozen Sepoys. Impecunious Englishmen found the territory at one time an Alsatia from their Calcutta creditors, but even that advantage has now ceased. The Bengali Babu, however, has found a new use for it. Profiting by the generous education afforded to him under British rule, he has seized the opportunity of showing his gratitude by establishing on this French soil a paper printed in the English language abusing the English Government in India. The Viceroy comes in for three long columns of attack in the first number, the readers of the paper being informed that Lord Dufferin, in violation of international law and justice, ordered the kingdom of Upper Burmah to be invaded and occupied by a British force—"an unprovoked act of military aggression." His lordship is declared to have given "unequivocal proof of his utter failure to realise the very first principles of sound administration," and he is likened in character to that "merry Monarch" of England, who "never said a foolish thing, nor ever did a wise one."

All this might be allowed to pass without notice by the Government of India, whose wise policy it is to allow a great latitude to the expression of opinions in the Native Press, especially to those newspapers published by their Babu proprietors in English. The publication does little harm, perhaps, and acts as a sort of moral safety-valve for getting rid of much folly which could only be dangerous if thought worthy of coercion. But the Chandernagore paper attempts to teach through illustrations also; one picture representing the Viceroy picking the pockets of the Hindoos, and another depicting British soldiers murdering Burmese peasants. The most ignorant Native can comprehend the meaning of these, and it is possible that a hint may have to be given to the French Governor that the "liberty of the Press" is not altogether to the unrestricted in Chandernagore.

THE Record is sorely troubled in spirit because the proselytising efforts of the Church Missionary Society's agents cannot be brought to bear upon the Indian artists at the Exhibition at South Kensington. The worthy champion of English orthodoxy lays the blame of refusal upon the superintendent of these artisans, "a Roman Catholic," and states that "the men are all of them prisoners from Agra gaol, and have been brought over on promise of release on their return, subject to good conduct." It is conduct, not creed, that has to be looked to. The Superintendent has, perhaps, merely repeated to the Missionaries, regarding their wish to interfere with the latter, Lord Melbourne's celebrated saying, "Can't you leave it alone?"

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondents.)

CALCUTTA, May 23.

The Finance Committee, now sitting at Simla, has addressed to the Chambers of Commerce and other public bodies a circular letter, describing the scope of its inquiries, and asking for information and suggestions. The letter states that the committee is instructed to direct its attention in the first instance to the revision of what are known as provisional contracts—that is, the arrangements between the Supreme and Local Governments regarding the control of most branches of the revenue, and most of the spending department. The other or Imperial departments are also to be examined. It will, therefore, the committee continues, be its duty to investigate the working of each head of expenditure, and to examine whether in any of them certain salaries can be curtailed, certain offices abolished or amalgamated, the number of officials reduced, and the cost of contingent stores and supplies can be diminished. The various associations addressed, and their individual members who may be familiar with the working of any department, are invited to favour the committee with any information tending to assist these researches. On receipt of their replies and those of the official authorities who have been consulted the committee will form a sketch of what reductions seem prima facie desirable, and will then visit the provincial capitals in order to personally discuss the proposals before its final decision. Arrangements will be made to take evidence, if necessary; but the committee is inclined to think that the procedure most conducive to an effective result will be that suggestions should be made in writing.

The wirepullers whose efforts to arouse political agitation among the people of Bengal I have noticed on more than one occasion have announced another mass meeting of ryots, to be held to-day at Uluberia village, on the Hooghly, a few miles below Calcutta. This meeting, as described in the published programme, appears to be similar to the meetings held lately at Jhankergatchee and Tarkessur. A large number of the people will be collected who will be addressed by delegates from the metropolis and asked to pass resolutions condemning certain specific measures, or expressing more or less vague general aspirations. The lesson of agitation which Bengal is giving seems to be extending to other parts of India; but thus far the people in the remoter Provinces have confined themselves to protesting against particular local grievances. In Assam, for instance, a number of meetings of ryots have denounced the new form of leases, which they consider prejudicial to their interests. Certain proceedings of the Madras Government, too, with regard to the Tanjore district have produced a local agitation which has taken the form of a succession of public meetings. In fact, persistent efforts are being made to teach the people of India the art of agitation; and it is noteworthy that the leaders of this agitation show the keenest interest in the Irish Home Rule question. One of their principal organs writes thus:—

"By the incessant agitation, persistent cries for justice, and criminal violence into which a policy of injustice has driven her, Ireland has now forced England to listen to her demands. Mr. Gladstone's measure is the first step towards the fruition of the wishes and aspirations of the Irish nation. The English people may at first consider it dangerous; but we are afraid they will have no alternative but to adopt it. Unfortunately, the English people, with all their avowed love of freedom, have never conceded any measure of freedom except under the force of circumstances. That has been the case in Canada, in other colonies, and in India also. A little more pressure by the Parnellites will compel England to comply with the just demands of the sister island; and we, the people of India, may reasonably take hope from what is likely to happen for Ireland."

"Much, however, depends upon ourselves. We have only to profit by the lessons of history, to continue the agitation against grievances in a persistent spirit, and, at the same time, according to constitutional form. Much of Mr. Gladstone's argument applies with remarkable force to India. Though the Bill affects Ireland, it has special interest for India, and we should closely watch its course. If England be once induced to do justice to Ireland, she must in course of time do the same justice to India."

The fact has already been noticed that in the last financial year the opium revenue showed a deficiency, as compared with the estimates, of about six lakhs, nearly the whole of which was in the pass duty levied in Bombay on the Malwa drug. It is satisfactory to learn from a recently published Government note that the returns for the first month of the current year more than restore the balance, the April pass duty in Bombay being nearly ten lakhs better than the estimate. The crop of the current season, however, is now considered likely to fall short of the estimate, especially in the Benares Agency, much damage having been done by hail. Some decrease is also apprehended in the Patna Agency.

The Japanese officers sent to visit India, on their way to Simla, inspected various military stations, and witnessed some field manœuvres at Lucknow, where they said they had been much struck with the appearance of the cavalry. On their arrival at Simla they had an interview with the Viceroy. The two military officers will remain at Simla for some time, studying various details connected with the Indian army; while their medical colleague will proceed to visit the hospitals at several of the larger cantonments in Upper India.

It is stated that the Nizam's Government has resolved to reduce the irregular troops by 8,000 men, thereby affecting an annual saving of from three to four lakhs.

The Bolan Railway is now nearly completed.

The committee, consisting of General Hancock and Messrs. Molesworth and O'Callaghan, which was appointed to consider the best route over the Khojak, have presented a report. They think the easiest way would be a little to the north of the present road, where a tunnel would be made 800 feet from the summit. The earthwork is completed up to the site of the proposed fortified camp in Pishin, and the rails will be laid by August.

Lisbon, MAY 23.

The Portuguese Government received to-day a telegram from Rome announcing the revision of the articles of the Concordat between the Vatican and Portugal, concluded and ratified on the most favourable terms to the latter.

By the revised Concordat the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Primate of Goa is defined, practically doing away in favour of Portugal with the double jurisdiction hitherto exercised over the Roman Catholic communities in British India by the Primate of Goa and the Vicars-Apostolic. Concessions are made on both sides, but practically Portuguese rights are confirmed.

This settlement of a question which at one time threatened a diplomatic rupture between the two Governments may satisfy both; but England can hardly view with satisfaction an arrangement placing ecclesiastical patronage within an important portion of her dominions in the hands of a foreign lay Power. As I understand, Portugal possesses by the Concordat power, through the Primate of Goa, to establish new sees in India.

BURMA.

MANDALAY, MAY 17.

Unusually early and heavy rains have fallen in Mandalay, and it is believed that this rainfall will prevent the breaking out of further incendiary fires. For the protection of the palace the Government has purchased and pulled down a large number of houses within the walled city near the palace palisade. A regiment of Bengal cavalry will shortly arrive in Mandalay. In the recent engagements the cavalymen were found very serviceable, and the insurgents greatly dread them. A force under Mr. Colquhoun on the 8th inst. killed 74 Burmans, and the enemy's forces were pursued for some miles, and a still greater number were killed by a body of the 25th Madras Lancers.

Eighty-four prisoners, mostly under heavy sentences—in many cases of transportation for life—have been sent to Thayetmyo. The trials of most of these prisoners, and of two men recently sentenced to death and shot, were held at the Deputy Commissioner's private house, the public, including Europeans, being excluded from the trials. This course was very injudicious, and it excites much dissatisfaction among the Burmese.

Mr. Bernard has left for Myingyan, and will proceed via Toungoo to Rangoon. He will be absent about a month from Mandalay.

A body of Shans recently seized the Tumboo bridge, near Mandalay, and entrenched themselves. A force was then sent against these Shans, who fled without awaiting an attack. The country continues in a disturbed state. Yesterday 2,000 insurgents attacked Myinthing, a village on the west bank of the river, opposite Pagan. A force of fifty rifles of the 11th Bengal Infantry, which was holding the village, repulsed the insurgents.

In the Kijouksai district, where the Myinzaing Prince's followers are in force, we hold only the space within rifle range from our posts.

The 5th and 25th Bombay Infantry and the headquarters of the Prince Albert's (Somersetshire Light Infantry) are on their way up the river.

MANDALAY, MAY 23.

A reinforcement of 500 men has been sent to the Chindwin district, owing to the check experienced by Major Trotter's column, near Tummo. Our casualties on that occasion were—Major Trotter wounded, one Sepoy jemadar and two Sepoy privates killed, and 12 Sepoys wounded. Some 800 insurgents attacked Major Trotter's column.

In view of the approaching rainy season, all the military posts in Upper Burma have been provisioned for six months. This very difficult task, involving the sending of thousands of cartloads of provisions through the country has been successfully accomplished, although the convoys were repeatedly and severely attacked.

A curious explanation is offered of the obstinate resistance of the insurgents. The Viceroy's amnesty proclamation offered a free pardon to all who surrendered before the end of June. It is stated that the proclamation has been misunderstood by the Burmese peasantry, who believe it means that permission has been given to them to continue fighting until the end of June. There seems to be no doubt that some such belief is current among the Burmese peasantry in several districts.

We have received from the India Office the following:—

From Viceroy, May 20, 1886.

"Lieutenant A. P. G. Gough, 1st Battalion Royal Welsh Fusiliers, severely wounded in the hand at Tingotgyi, Upper Burma, 16th of May.

"Major W. F. Trotter, Political Agent at Manipur, severely wounded in the knee in attack by dacoits near Tummo, 13th of May."

THE DUTCH EAST INDIES.

THE HAGUE, MAY 22.

A despatch from the Governor-General of the Dutch East Indies announces that yesterday a resident at Batavia was compelled to suppress by force a revolt on a private estate at Tjomas, in the district of Buitenzorg, 500 of the inhabitants having taken up arms and attacked the remainder of the population. The rebels had fifty killed and wounded. The rising is attributed to the demands made by the owner of the property on the inhabitants. Tranquillity has now been restored.

OUR FOREIGN CRITICS.

(From a very Special Correspondent.)

It was sunset on the Indian Ocean; and the good ship Tower of Babel was cleaving the calm waters of that sultry sea on her westward voyage. It was the hour before dinner, when one ceases for a happy fleeting moment to live in the past or even in the present, and can occupy oneself solely with gastronomic anticipations. The Tower of Babel was one of the latest and finest additions to the fleet of the great Monopolium Steamship Company, and conveyed the usual freights in the usual manner and at the usual charges. It was as yet early in the season, and the passengers were but few in number; and those fortunate enough to travel under such circumstances were spared the indignity and discomfort of performing all the details of their toilet in a small cabin under the concentrated and contemptuous gaze of two or more total strangers. As the clerk at the Shipping Office neatly expressed it—"passengers were at a premium, and cabins at a discount." The steamer was carrying to Europe those distinguished representatives of foreign armies who had lately been regaled with a close inspection of the army of India. For many weary weeks these military gentlemen had been dragged about from place to place to see and to be seen; they had been, as the Frenchman pathetically remarked, "toujours en evidence"; and it was rumoured that they had slept nightly in their spurs and with their sabres beneath their pillows. Indeed, this latter peculiarity had become with them almost second nature; and it was not till Major Count von Schultze and Hauptmann Prinz von Müller, the representatives of the Fatherland, had fallen heavily down the companion hand-in-hand, that they were induced, whilst at sea, to lay aside some of the outward semblances of war. The two Germans had taken a good deal of skin off their distinguished noses, but had not as yet been able to come to any satisfactory conclusion whether the fall should be attributed to the length of their spurs, or to the affecting character of their adieux at the Bombay Yacht Club. The chief military power of Europe having thus initiated so salutary a reform, it was not long before the remaining representatives began to lay aside the "shop," and attire themselves in such garments as they considered best suited to "a life on the ocean wave," and the indulgence of personal ease. Both the Frenchmen, with the national straining after theatrical effect, had disguised themselves in such marine costumes as are generally in vogue in the well known opera of Massaniello. This, however picturesque and graceful on the stage, seemed to acquire in Indian latitudes a bizarre and almost ludicrous appearance. One of the Yankees, whose reiterated boast it was that he "bossed a bakery in New York," was never seen without a small white paper cap and a large apron, in token of his other and more peaceful callings; while the Russian Count Smoltork, with the graceful tact of his nation, had assumed the gaberde and the baggy trousers of an Afghan, in connection with which his long military boots looked slightly incongruous. The warm-hearted and volatile Italian had apparently, during a brief visit to Calcutta, been struck with the simple garb of the Bengali Baboo, and had arrayed himself in a close (but by no means servile) imitation of the national dhotie. The two German officers and the Austrian representative alone invariably wore uniform. With the former this was optional, while the latter had no other choice than to be always seen in the costly habiliments of a Hungarian Hussar. The fact was that his valet had been accidentally left behind at Bombay. He was the only man living who knew the ins-and-outs of his master's costume, and without his assistance his master had not the courage to attempt to remove it.

This motley, if representative group, was sitting on deck chairs, some of them stimulating their jaded and overworked appetites by sherry and bitters; some loosening their waist-belts and thinking regretfully of the days when they were young and hungry; while the Yankee (who proposed to publish a book of travels on his return to the States) produced from the pocket of his apron a note book and pencil, and prepared to take down the words of wisdom which might (or might not) fall from the lips of his colleagues. He was provided with a reading lamp which, in defiance of all the Company's rules and regulations, he proceeded to light and placed beside him on the deck. The garrulous Frenchman was the first to break the silence. He had taken no notes whatever during the Camp of Exercise, and was getting rather anxious about his report, and he was in the habit of filching information from other and more industrious workers. He addressed himself to one of the Russians who was sitting by, and inquired, in a careless manner, "What did you think of General Slapdash?" The Muscovite, however, only muttered something about not feeling very well (his usual excuse when hard pressed), and refrained from in any way committing himself to a discussion of that leader's merits. "I think," said von Müller, in the hesitating tone of a man who is about to perpetrate a joke, and is not quite certain of its reception, "I think that if he had had less dash he might often have given a harder slap!" This exquisite pleasantry was loudly applauded by the military circle, and even Schultze laughed almost uproariously when the intricacies of his junior's jest had been thoroughly explained to him. Now Von Müller seemed determined to pose as a conversationalist, and led the discussion to the reception the foreigners had met with in Calcutta, and which they all, with one exception, pronounced most gratifying. The exception was Schultze, who growled forth a complaint that the Viceroy had not sent an aide-de-camp to meet the party at the station. "No doubt," interrupted the Hungarian, "it was a grave and monstrous oversight, but—by the bye"—he continued, "where was the German Consul on that occasion?" To this home thrust the Teuton made no reply.

The same Frenchman who had before spoken, feeling that he was not getting on as fast as he could wish, addressed the Yankee and inquired what he thought of the sepoys? "Some of the sepoys," said the warrior from the United States, "are bad, some are very bad; some are good, the remainder are very good." This remark seemed to strike him as so sound, that he copied it at once into his note-book for future guidance. "But what," cried the impulsive Gaul, "do you think of the English officers?" and he turned once more to the emissary of the White Czar. "I think them very pleasant gentlemen," returned the Russian evasively. "But I want your opinion as to their skill in the art of war," screamed the Frenchman. Loudly as the latter spoke, the soldier addressed seemed not to have heard him, for he remarked that it was a fine night and that the sea was calm. The Italian, who was preparing a work in several volumes, on "Commissariat Organisation," now led the conversation in this direction. "They make very fair bread up at Delhi," said the Yankee, who seemed to think that here at least his opinion must have weight, "but it lacked variety: none of those corn-cakes we turn out in my place in New York." How much information the Italian might have elicited on so engrossing a topic it is hard to say; but at this moment the irrepressible Frenchman broke in again, and speaking generally to the circle, inquired what they all thought of the officering of native regiments. On this point opinion seemed unanimous, that a regiment of which three-fourths of its British officers were on other employ, could hardly be considered in an obtrusively healthy condition. One wily Muscovite whispered to the other something about picking off mounted men at long ranges, and the two rubbed their hands in stealthy glee. The American now looked up from his note-book, and sharpening his pencil, inquired of his neighbours, "How did their Transport Department and dispositions for moving troops strike you?" Whether there was something comic in his voice or manner, or whether the question itself recalled farcical reminiscences (which is of course improbable), certain it is that the Yankee's simple question was received by all with shouts of laughter. Again and again did peal after peal of merriment resound through the ship, while the questioner looked wonderingly from one to the other, and no answer could he obtain from anybody.

When quiet was again restored, the Frenchman advanced into the middle of the circle. His appearance was gay and débonnaire. There was a wild wicked gleam in his eye, and his jaunty Massaniello cap clung precariously on one side of his head. His voice, however, was grave, and his manner invited attention. "I have long desired," said he, "to ask you all one simple question. What is your opinion as to the state of society in the Indian Empire?" There was dead silence—and then the sound of the dinner gong broke up the circle, and relieved everybody from the discussion of a subject of enthralling interest.—Civil and Military Gazette.

An alteration has been made in the staff pay of the Assistant Adjutant-General at headquarters, Madras and Bombay. It is in future to be Rs. 500 per mensem, with a special extra allowance of Rs. 100 to the officer doing his duty.

INDIA AS A FIELD FOR INVENTIONS.

Our American cousins, like our German neighbours, are devoting an amazing amount of attention to British Colonies, for the purpose of pushing their trade, with results the reverse, if possible, to our manufacturers and engineers. It behoves us, therefore, to jealously watch their doings and to take steps so as not to be left behind in the race for business. India is now pointed to by a New York contemporary as a splendid field for the American inventor. The present industrial requirements of India form the subject of a communication received by our contemporary from a correspondent in Calcutta, whose position as proprietor of a large tea estate has given him an excellent opportunity for observation. His suggestions will be of equal interest to English inventors, as they point out new fields for the application of their ingenuity. After a long period of apparent mechanical inertia, India is now evincing a progressiveness which will make her a country whose acquaintance it will be very desirable to cultivate. As her resources are still largely agricultural, one of the first demands is for improved farming tools and appliances. In tea culture, improved machines for rolling the leaf after withering, for firing, sorting, and sifting, are in demand, and would be heartily welcomed by many planters. In handling silk a great disadvantage is at present experienced from the difficulty of producing an even thread. The fibre of the native silk is excellent, but the manipulations which it subsequently undergoes are so imperfectly performed that the product comes out an inferior article. India, it will be remembered, is the old home of the sugar cane, and improved crushing machinery finds ready market. One firm alone makes over a hundred thousand dollars annually in royalties from its patent mill. The indigo industry has been brought to considerable perfection, though there is still room for improvement in the chemical and mechanical manipulations. In addition, there are large amounts of crude products, such as oil, seeds, jute, and cotton, which are exported, but which could be worked up at home to good advantage were suitable manufacturing processes available.

As all these industries require large quantities of worked timber for boxes, buildings, carts, tool mountings, &c., there is an excellent market for woodworking machinery. In many parts of the empire there are valuable forests, but the lack of sawmills prevents them from being utilised. The demand is particularly for portable machines which can be conveniently moved from place to place as demand and timber supply require. The mining implements of India are still very primitive, though the development of the petroleum industry has created a demand for improved boring tools. Steam launches and barges are coming into more general use, and considerable progress is shown in this direction. The railways have effected a marked mechanical advance. They now manufacture their own locomotives and most other appliances for railway service. We might enumerate many other departments in which this spirit of progressiveness is manifest, but we have probably said enough to convince inventors that there is already a field in India in which to extend the success achieved at home, and it is a field the importance of which is annually increasing. Our manufacturers, exporters, and inventors will be unwise if they overlook India in their pursuit of new avenues for the distribution of their merchandise and the introduction of useful machinery and patent appliances.

The patent laws of India are liberal towards the inventor, and protection is as readily accorded there as in other countries; and with regular steam communication between England and India, to which add the telegraph, India is no longer an "out-of-the-world, barbarian country." The present time of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition appears to be specially appropriate for the study of India's requirements, and it is to be hoped that our large engineers, manufacturers, and tool and implement makers will not let the opportunity pass.—Invention.

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

Several years have passed since the late Professor Fawcett urged the House of Commons to initiate an inquiry into the Government of India, but only recently has any desire been evinced—by those holding the means of setting such an inquiry on foot—to proceed actively in that direction. A matter which, from its vast importance, should have been the last to be subjected to party feeling or manoeuvre has been dragged into the arena of political warfare, and bids fair to result in an investigation being undertaken which will not have the confidence of a moiety of the interests involved. Commercially speaking, the aim has been, in urging upon her Majesty's Government the desirability of appointing a Committee of Inquiry, to endeavour to obtain the nomination of a body whose opinions would be entirely unprejudiced by the results of personal contact—officially—with the system into which inquiry is asked. The confidence of commercial men in India, as well as the confidence of those in this country, whose interests are largely bound up in the welfare of that Empire, is not too strong, as regards the capability of officials, practically upon their trial, to arrive at conclusions, or agree upon recommendations, which will be of a beneficial character.

In the course of last month a discussion took place in the House of Lords, which resulted in the adoption of a motion for appointing a committee of peers, to act in conjunction with the committee to be appointed by the Lower House, to inquire into the Government of India Act, 1858, and other subsequent measures. Commercial interests are, as might be expected, very insufficiently represented on this branch of the inquiring body; and, from what has transpired in connection with questions directed to the Under-Secretary of State for India, there would appear to be very little hope for a correction of the overwhelming representation of "official interests" in the selection of the Commons' Committee. This latter selection will not, however, we are pleased to note, pass unchallenged by an endeavour to obtain a fairer recognition of the commercial element in Indian affairs, and with this object the ex-President of the London Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Magniac, M.P., has placed a motion on the paper for discussion, when the nomination of the committee is proposed, calling attention to the "necessity of placing upon the India Committee some members having a knowledge of the circumstances of the vast interests connected with the holding and cultivation of land in India for commercial purposes by British subjects, and also with the external commerce of the country." This motion calls for the support of every member of the Legislature whose desire is to have an inquiry which will be impartial, exhaustive and effective. The Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom may urge with confidence upon their Parliamentary representatives to support Mr. Magniac when his motion is made, for it is but a mild reflex of what is desired by the Indian Chambers. We say mild reflex, for the following excerpt from the petition of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce to the late Secretary of State for India praying "that the inquiry shall be in the strictest sense impartial and unbiassed; and, in this view, will exclude from the said committee all persons who may at any time have held office in India or been connected with its administration," shows the prevailing opinion amongst commercial men in our great dependency. The motion of Mr. Magniac may, under these circumstances, be taken as fair ground for a satisfactory compromise, and Chambers of Commerce at home may do useful service on behalf of their distant colleagues by inducing a strong support of it through their representatives in the Imperial House.—Chamber of Commerce Journal.

PARTURIUNT MONTES——

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

We learn from Simla that the members of the Financial Committee have already assembled, and are pulling themselves together for their struggle with the work which lies before them. Statistics of the most intricate and searching character have been demanded. Of so elaborate a nature does the scrutiny promise to be, that a long time must perforce elapse before the necessary tabular statements and details can be prepared and placed in the hands of the members; whilst the sitting of so enormous a mass of information will necessitate Herculean efforts on the part of the Committee.—Pioneer, April 20th.

Recitative ; Hon'ble W. W. to music expressive of caution :—

The Hills are full of little birds.
What need of compromising words ?
We all know what we think—
Wherefore I beg to move that we,
In sign of unanimity,
Do wink a pregnant wink.

President :—

I second the motion with pleasure.

2nd Member :—

But I an amendment propose,
Let each man advance, in slow measure,
His thumb to the side of his nose.

*Motion carried nem. con. C—e stand to order, Hon'ble W. W.—
intones fortissimo through a paper trumpet :—*

Bring pens in sheaves and writing-blocks in bales !
Pour out the ink-kegs into stable-pails !
Let blotting-pads in bushels strew the floor !
Produce your office-boxes by the score !
Pile on statistics till the tables creak,
[E—and I can sift 'em in a week]
Each to his place ! Draw out your cleanest pen.
Flourish it once, and—put it back again !
Drop down exhausted ! Let the Public see You're worth your salt ! Now, taking time from me, Wipe with one trembling hand a toil-worn brow—
Then, altogether, make an awful row !
Turn to the Plains ! What ho there ! Pipes and tabors !
Tell them about our Herculean labours.

Full chorus of C—e to accompaniment of clinking despatch-boxes :—

We have fled the toils of tennis ; we are saving you your pennies ;
On the mountain where our den is, we are slaving all the day ;
And we think it only fitting, you should know that we are sitting,
While a sinful world is flitting off to dinner, dance and play.
Laughing men and maids invite us where Mahasu woods delight us ;
Notes for sylvan fêtes indite us, but we shun the gilded snare ;
For we think upon our Duty, and are blind to Love and Beauty,
We despise the thought of chuti—scoff at exercise and air.

Adagio, con molt exp :—

We're a wonderful Committee ; we deserve your praise and pity, Ke-ind Christian fellow-citizens we hope you'll take the hint.
We are dying of exertion, and the lack of all diversion ;
And should value the insertion of these sentiments in print.

Chorus from the Plains of the Steaming Thousands :—

There is a way of putting things
Intrinsically great and grand,
That laughter and derision brings,
And wakes irreverence in the land.
The office Anglo-Indian
Is not a sentimental man.

He knows, forgive the fact, your pay,
Is some six times as much as his'n.
He works—at least eight hours a day,
Perspiring in a sultry prison.
Whereas, whate'er your labours be,
Your summer heat is seventy-three ;

And he demands it as his due,
That you sit still and, if you can,
Produce, before the year is through,
A sober, practicable plan.
How does our dear Sam Gerridge spout it ?
"We works, but we don't 'owl about it."

THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

On Tuesday the sixty-third anniversary meeting of this society was held at the society's house, 22, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly. Colonel Yule (president) occupied the chair, and amongst those present were Sir T. Edward Colebrooke, Bart., Professor R. K. Douglas, Sir Harrow Ellis, General MacLagan, Sir Thomas Wade, Captain Halford, Major-General Sir F. J. Goldsmid (secretary), and Mr. Robert N. Cust (hon. secretary). The secretary read the annual report, from which it appeared that the financial position of the society was satisfactory, showing, as it did, a balance on the right side of about £337 10s., after the investment of £100 in stock in the course of the year. Reference was made in the council's yearly statement to the papers read during the session. Officers were next elected for the ensuing sessional year. In the course of his address the chairman proceeded to allude to the life and career of the late Sir Arthur Phayre. He said : "I make no attempt now to follow his history in detail. For thirty years he was occupied in the administration of British Burmah, occupied by the Burmese race. When the conquest of Pegu, in 1862, had called him to a post of great eminence as ruler of that province, he came to it by no means unknown to its people, for he had been administering provinces on either side of the Delta for years before. His justness and firmness, his great liberality, his mastery of the Burmese language, and intimate knowledge of those whom he ruled were known and appreciated by many of the new British subjects; whilst his dignity, courtesy, and pure character, his considerate and patient bearing—all combined to win him the favour and confidence of those whom he now governed. The early years of his administration in Pegu were troubled by such anxieties as now beset our officers in Upper Burma, but these were overcome, the province gradually quieted down, and by his wise and considerate administration, which in 1862 was extended to the whole of British Burma, embracing a seaboard of 900 miles, was laid the foundation of that prosperity and progress which have so remarkably characterised those provinces."

THE COTTON INDUSTRY OF INDIA.

The rapid development of the cotton industry of India should not be overlooked by English cotton spinners and manufacturers. In the year 1883-4 twelve mills were added to the sixty-two already in existence, and additional spindles have also been introduced into many of the older mills. The following table shows the increase in the number of mills worked by steam, and other facts concerning them:—

	No. of Mules.	No. of Looms.	No. of Spindles.	Average daily No. of hands employed.
1879-80 ...	58	13,307	1,470,830	39,537
1882-83 ...	62	14,386	1,550,941	53,231
1883-84 ...	74	16,251	1,895,284	61,386

The capital invested in these mills is estimated at £10,000,000, and the consumption of cotton during the year 1883-4 amounted to 168,000,000 lbs. Five years previously the exports of cotton yarn, twist, and piece goods from India was valued at £1,621,746; but in 1883-4 it had risen to £2,853,171, or 56 per cent. Most of the twist and yarn was consigned to China and Japan. The chief markets for piece goods were Arabia and Zanzibar.

The Punjab Government has published a monograph on the cotton manufacture in the Punjab. It states that the total annual cotton yield is 1,011,815 maunds, of which about 84 per cent. is consumed locally. It is manufactured by indigenous looms for native wear. The manufacture is conducted in all its stages by single operatives working at home. Throughout the Punjab there is only one establishment that employs twenty hands. Indian piece goods are also imported into the country from Bombay and the North-Western Provinces; nevertheless, the exports, which average something like 140,000 maunds a year, far exceed the imports, and two-thirds of these are said to be of Punjab manufacture. Most of the exports go to Rajputana; a good deal of cloth also finds its way up the passes into Kashmir, and still more is taken by Afghanistan. The total quantity of cloth retained in the Punjab for home use is estimated at 670,000 maunds, representing a value of £225,000. But this by no means suffices for the requirements of the population only in the case of cheap and coarse goods. During the last four years an average of 353,711 maunds of European piece goods, worth £3,006,543, has been consumed by the Punjabis. It is, however, worth noticing that the use of European piece goods does not show any tendency to an increase in proportion to the larger purchasing powers of the people, which seems to show that the native weaver is holding his own against foreign competition, and especially against goods of English manufacture. The average expenditure per head of the population in the Punjab on cotton fabrics must be about 5s. 6d., which speaks well for the prosperity of the district.—The Textile Recorder.

BENGAL.

The following letter has been forwarded to the Indian Mirror of Calcutta by the Private Secretary to the Viceroy:—Having observed in a pamphlet containing a series of articles extracted from the Indian Mirror an assertion that a certain article in the Pioneer was, if not directly at least indirectly, inspired by Lord Dufferin, I thought it my duty to call the Viceroy's attention to the passage. As it is obvious that a good deal of practical inconvenience might arise if it were imagined that his Excellency is in the habit of communicating his views and opinions through the medium of anonymous articles in Indian newspapers, I am authorised to inform you, in the most absolute manner, that there is not the slightest foundation for such a supposition either in this or in any other instance.

BOMBAY.

MR. H. M. PHIPSON has, at the request of Lady Reay, undertaken the duties of honorary secretary to the Bombay Branch of the Countess of Dufferin's Fund, during the absence of Mr. H. R. King.

The result of the recent examination of candidates for the office of solicitor of the High Court was made known on Monday. All the three candidates have failed.

THE death is announced of Mr. Hastings Palmer, at his residence at Chudderghaut. His death renders vacant the superintendentship of the Mint, which carries with it a salary of Rs. 600 a month.

MR. DAVID ROSS, C.I.E., who recently went home on furlough, contemplates severing his connection with the North-Western State Railway of which he is deputy traffic manager. Mr. G. Hawkes, of the State Railway Department, is now acting for him. Mr. M. Marzban will officiate as district assistant.

COLONEL LUDLOW, the Inspector-General of Police, has received orders to proceed with the trial of the Sikhs engaged in the late fatal riot in Aurungabad by committing them for trial before Mr. Gya Pershad, B.A., the First Talukdar. Mr. Forbes prosecutes on behalf of Government, and Mr. Battenburg has been retained for the defence.

THE Thakore Sahib of Morvi has subscribed Rs. 1,000 to the "S. H. Phillpotts" memorial fund. The late Mr. Phillpotts was well known to the Thakore Sahib. At a recent meeting of the subscribers to the fund, it was resolved to devote Rs. 2,000 towards the erection of a drinking fountain in Ahmedabad, with a marble portrait medallion of the late judge introduced into it.

MADRAS.

SMALL-POX is reported to be raging in Mysore. A local paper reports 350 deaths from 1,000 cases. The sanitation of Mysore is said to be disgraceful.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL SCHARLIEB, Madras Volunteer Guards, has been granted the honorary rank of colonel on completion of twenty-five years' service as a Commanding Officer of Volunteers; and Captain James, of the same regiment, has been granted the honorary rank of Major on completion of twenty years' service as a Commanding Officer of Volunteers.

MR. LAVELL, the promoter of the Kolar gold fields, and Mr. Marsh, a mining engineer, who have been appointed mining prospectors to the Maisur Government, left Bangalore on the 27th on a prospecting tour through the province to ascertain the exact localities through which the auriferous reefs run. A map will be prepared which will prevent unscrupulous promoters from obtaining land destitute of reefs and representing it in England as auriferous.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

DR. C. R. STULPNAGEL will succeed the late Mr. Dick as Inspector of Schools, Lahore Circle; Mr. T. C. Lewis officiating for Dr. Leitner as Principal of the Lahore Government College. Mr. F. Cope, Assistant Professor, will officiate as Professor in the College.

THE Syndicate of the Punjab University has recommended to the Senate the re-appointment of Mr. F. de H. Larpent as Registrar of the University for a further period of six months. "During his tenure of the office," remarks the local paper, "Mr. Larpent has done much towards placing the finances of the University on a proper footing, and it is fortunate that his services are still available."

COLONEL H. V. Riddell, District Judge of Amritsar, will, it is announced, be appointed to officiate as additional Divisional Judge of the temporary division to be shortly established at Hoshiarpur. Mr. G. J. M. Rennie, officiating Deputy Commissioner, Montgomery, will relieve Colonel Riddell of the Amritsar District Judgeship. Mr. J. A. E. Miller, Divisional Judge, Ludhiana, has been granted privilege leave for two and a half months, from the 16th of May.

ASSAM DINNER.—The next Assam dinner will take place on Thursday, the 27th of May, the day following the Derby. As the attendance this year is certain to largely exceed any previous occasion, partly owing to the additional number of officers and planters now at home, and partly to the attraction of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, which is bringing up a great number of old Assamese from the country, Scotland, and Ireland, the committee have arranged for the Venetian saloon at the Holborn Restaurant being placed at their disposal. This splendid room is capable of dining 250 comfortably, with a reception room attached correspondingly large; thus overcrowding, which was the only drawback to the brilliant success of last year's gathering, will be avoided. Tickets, for which we advise very early application being made, can be obtained of J. Berry White, Esq., or Colonel Turner Jones, E.I.U.S. Club, 14, St. James's-square, S.W.; J. Edward Todd, Esq., Oriental Club, Hanover-square, W.; William Roberts, Esq., Rochester Buildings, Leadenhall-street; Robert Lyell, Esq., 138, Leadenhall street, E.C.; James Warren, Esq., 1, Great Winchester-street, E.C.; or H. Earnshaw, Esq., 14, St. Mary's-axe, E.C., who form the committee of management. The chair will be taken by General R. H. Keatinge, V.C., S.C.I., late Chief Commissioner of Assam and Chairman of the Indian Tea Committee at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition. Gentlemen connected with the province of Assam, including the districts of Cachar and Sylhet, by service, residence, or property, are eligible to attend and to introduce guests.

THE SILVER QUESTION.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—What hinders Her Majesty's Government from making a profit of one million sterling by coining silver?

Why should Her Majesty's loyal and faithful subjects in India be taxed 25 per cent., or five shillings in the pound, on all their savings? A very heavy property-tax indeed!

If forty millions of English florins were sent to India, and declared to be current there, they would be eagerly sought for by officers and sergeants retiring from the service.

At present the law declares that the limit of payments in silver should be forty shillings. Why should not this limit be raised to £5?

If the English Mint be unable to coin forty millions of English florins, the Bombay and Calcutta Mints can do so.—Your obedient servant, T.

EVERYDAY LIFE OF INDIAN WOMEN.

(Extracts from Paper read by Capt. Richard Carnac Temple before the Indian Section, Society of Arts, &c., May 21st.)

An Indian woman's life in its ordinary course is divided into two clearly defined parts, which are quite distinct, though separate from each other only by the fateful day on which she first goes to take up her abode within her father-in-law's family. Note that it is not called in the Indian language her husband's family, for that, under the Indian family system, it can seldom be in the case of a bride. Childhood rather than girlhood is the heyday of the Indian women. Free to play as she pleases, with plenty of companions, for children galore can hardly ever be wanting in a family which all live together, from oldest to youngest; free to run in and out of the houses of friends, never bothered to learn anything except what she can pick up from the women about her, never worried with caste restriction, never asked to do more in the way of labour than to help in the housework, petted by her parents, spoilt by her aunts and uncles, and beloved by her brothers, an Indian girl-child is indeed happy—as children count happiness. And then suddenly the curtain falls. At about ten years of age—earlier in some parts and later in others—our spoilt child is old enough to work in earnest, and so she is packed off, sorely against her will, to join her husband's family, entering it not as our brides enter their future homes, at the head of the female community, but at the bottom. Child though she still is, her childhood is now for ever past, and she is turned into a young woman, only too often into by no means a happy one.

In the average Indian family the strictest domestic economy is the rule of life, and the household work is done by the women of the household, not, as with us, by paid servants. Servants there are, of course, in all Indian families, but they are, as a rule, on a totally different footing to the European domestic, being for the most part independent persons with a clientelle, for whom they perform certain customary services for a customary wage. The distribution of the daily work, down to that of the most menial kind, lies with the materfamilias, who may be best described as the oldest woman in the family proper under coverture, for widows can have no authority. The cooking, as the work of honour, she keeps to herself, but the house-cleaning, the washing, the care of the children, the drawing of water, the making of the beds, and so on, is done by the less dignified members of the household, as she directs; and whatever is most menial, most disagreeable, and the hardest work is thrust upon the bride. She is the servant of the very servants, and must obey everybody. It is hardly, therefore, to be wondered at that, after her previous training, it is by no means an uncommon occurrence that she has to be forcibly broken into her new way of life, that she is for ever sighing after the flesh-pots of her father's house, that there are various "customs" which enable her to resist it at stated times after the marriage, and that the law is often invoked to oblige brides to return to their husband's family after the customary term of such visits has expired.

Not only is our bride thus turned into a drudge, often unmercifully overworked, but from the day she gives up her childhood to the day of her death—it may be for sixty years—she is secluded, and sees nothing of the world outside the walls of the family enclosure. It should always, therefore, be borne in mind when trying to realise Indian female life, what a very important thing the domestic economy is to a woman; how largely the petty affairs of the household loom upon her horizon. Her happiness or misery indeed entirely depend on the manner in which the affairs of the family are conducted. Now, considering that the female mind has for centuries been mainly directed to this all-important matter, it is not astonishing to find that such questions as the proper method of eating and drinking, and of domestic propriety generally—the intercourse that is, which is permissible and right between the various members of the household, male or female—have long been regulated with the utmost minuteness. To us who roam the world at will, and whose interests are often fixed far more outside than inside our homes, it may seem remarkable that such infinitesimal restrictions and numberless customs as are found in full swing in an orthodox Hindu household should be remembered and carried out with the exactitude demanded of the womenkind; but if we consider that these make up their whole life, and that they are called upon to pay attention to nothing else, their capacity for recollecting when to veil and unveil, whom to address and avoid, when they must run away, and when they may speak, cease to be extraordinary. And regarding these customs of social propriety, I must say that the more one studies them the more one is impressed with their perverted ingenuity. They seem purposely invented to make the unfortunate victim of them as uncomfortable as possible. The Indian woman, isolated from the outer world by custom, is again by custom isolated as far as practicable from all the male members of that little inner world to which she is confined. Free intercourse, even with her own husband, is not permitted her while yet her youthful capabilities for joyousness exist. No wonder that absence of jollity is a characteristic of the Indian generally, for the happy laughter of a home is denied them by custom in the most persistent manner.

As to the hard lot of the childless widow, so much has been said elsewhere, and so often, that I do not feel inclined to enlarge upon it to-night, especially as enforced widowhood is not nearly so general as is usually made out by those who would deduce a moral from Indian manners to the glorification of habits of Christians. It is often not prevalent among classes who conform generally to the customs I have been mentioning, and circumstances make it impossible among many that are not comparatively wealthy, but where it is the rule nothing can be more cruel and—I feel justified in using the strong term—more revolting. Take the case of the widow from infancy: shorn of all that women value anywhere in the world, dressed in coarse clothing, deprived of her ornaments, compelled to fast till health breaks down, made to subsist on the coarsest of food, kept out of what amusements come in the way of the rest of the household, forced into being the unpaid drudge of the family, held to be the legitimate butt of the ill-nature of all, considered fit only to amuse the children, openly called and taught to think herself a creature of ill-omen—this being the cause of all the rest of her sorrows—superstition has, indeed, nowhere else shown more clearly its power to pervert the reason of man. How much the women dread widowhood is exhibited to the full in the fact that to call a woman a widow is to offer her a dire insult, and from her earliest childhood a girl is taught to pray that she might die while yet the red spot of coverture remains on her forehead.

We naturally turn from the consideration of the life itself to that of the best method of changing it or improving it. Many attempts are, of course being made both by Natives and Europeans to bring about a happier and more rational state of things. Among these may be reckoned the Zenana Mission, as to the good work of which many high hopes have been raised; but there would seem to be a fatal flaw in the theory on which the system is based. English ladies, often apparently completely ignorant of Indian ways, are sent out to mix as best they may with those of the Indian seraglios, in order to teach them the beauties of civilisation, and, I suppose, convert them to Christianity. Now, considering that the key to the seraglio is absolutely in the power of the owner thereof, it seems impossible to believe that he would admit outsiders within its walls, if he thought that they would in any way be likely to influence the religion of his women. The heads of Native families are far from being simple-minded, and most of them, if not bigots themselves, are sure to have bigoted wives; and since what access English ladies can have to the women generally rests entirely with these two authorities, I cannot quite understand how the members of the Zenana Mission differ in their action from those of any other missionary body. They may get into the houses of the Native gentlemen who sympathise with the movement, but these must be the very few who have probably already themselves done much towards elevating the female members of their families; and how about the vast majority who have no desire for change? Either it appears to me the Zenana Mission ladies do not find their way inside the harems at all, or they do so purely as ordinary visitors. I would not, therefore, be inclined to place much faith in the efforts of these well-intentioned persons as likely to result in anything of practical value.

The control of the Quetta District has been transferred to the Government of India from the 1st April, from which date the Command is under his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India. The medical administration of the district devolves on the Surgeon-General, of Her Majesty's Forces in Bengal, the Ordnance Establishments fall to the Bengal Circle of Superintendence, and the Commissariat Establishments rest with the Western Circle, Bengal Commissariat Department.

JAPANESE HOMES.*

Japan is a land of surprises—everything being so different to the conventional views which obtain in the Western Hemisphere, and in the matter of houses the nation is no exception to the rule. "It is a curious sight to look over a vast city of nearly a million inhabitants and detect no chimney with its homelike streak of blue smoke." Picturesqueness may suffer, but a clear atmosphere more than balances the account. All being thus strange it has occurred to an American scientist, Mr. Edward S. Morse by name, that an account of "Japanese Homes and their Surroundings" would afford matter of interest for the family of nations at large, who, in spite of their boasted civilization, have still much to learn in the way of building, decorating and furnishing a house.

In criticising the mode and style in which the Japanese erect their buildings, it must not be overlooked that in a region liable at any moment to earthquakes, substantial homes would be scarcely in place, indeed, barely possible, while the absence of material other than wood compels a resort to the somewhat fragile and perishable system of architecture which so disappoints a traveller unused to reflect on the whys and wherefores of national life. It must also be kept in mind that as there are no chairs and the inhabitants squat on the floor, so, as a consequence, the windows are comparatively close to the ground; the effect to an eye unaccustomed to this peculiarity is strange and depressing. The absence of paint is perhaps less unique to European tastes, as of late years a fashion has grown up amongst ourselves of having stained or varnished wood, though, alas, too frequently it is bedaubed with a feeble imitation of the beauty of oak, mahogany, &c. "Graining" is an art unknown to the Japanese, who prefer the sound simplicity of nature to the gaudy charms of art. But it must not be surmised that Japanese homes are wanting in attractiveness. On the contrary, at every turn the careful observer will find an attempt to please, and an effort to enchant. What, for instance, can be more delightful than the simple desire of making a sort of conservatory upon the top of the roof, which is flattened for the purpose of holding lilies and such flowers as grow in rich profusion in the island? But the thought naturally arises that as the whole structure is composed of wood, the moisture which trickles from the earth must decay the fabric and spoil the edifice: perhaps this would be the case were it not that conflagrations are of everyday occurrence, and on such occasions no attempt is, or can be, made to save the buildings; perhaps thus fire does the work of destruction rather than water.

The external elegance of the home is also enhanced by the tasty gardens with which they are invariably accompanied. "The Japanese," says Mr. Morse, "have brought their garden arts to such perfection that a plot of ground ten feet square is capable of being exquisitely beautified by their methods. Plots of ground that in this country are too often encumbered with coal-ashes, tea-grounds, tin cans, and the garbage barrel, in Japan are rendered charming to the eye by the simplest means. With cleanliness, simplicity, and a few little evergreen shrubs, one or two little clusters of flowers, a rustic fence from the side of the house, a quaintly shaped flower-pot or two containing a few choice plants—the simplest garden is attained. So much do the Japanese admire gardens and garden effects that their smallest strips of ground are utilised for this purpose." The picturesqueness, too, is considerably enhanced by the quaint palisades with which the plots of ground are enclosed in place of the hideous unromantic railings which disfigure and disgrace European homes.

Thus much for the outside of Japanese homes: inside the arrangements are, if possible, even more quaint, more abnormal, and more striking. "In the winter the rooms are warmed with charcoal stoves, the material being kept under the floor, which latter takes up. A similar device is adopted in the vestibule or hall, and the umbrellas, instead of being placed in a stand, are stowed away under the planks on which the entrants tread! In place of carpets there are an endless array of mats," all constructed of a certain size, so that in directing an architect to draw a plan of a room it is only necessary to tell him how many mats are to be accommodated. "Upon these mats the people eat, sleep, and die: they represent the bed, chair, lounge, and sometimes table, combined. In resting upon them the Japanese assume a kneeling position—the legs turned beneath, and the haunches resting upon the calves of the legs and the inner sides of the heels, the toes being turned in so that the upper and outer part of the instep bears directly on the mats." As may well be supposed, these mats get damp, musty, and dirty, and "their very nature affords abundant hiding-places for fleas, which are the unmitigated misery of foreigners who travel in Japan."

A Britisher loves to decorate his home in pairs—everything corresponds with its brother in the corner. In Japan it is just the reverse; there is never any regard to "the eternal fitness of things," on the contrary, symmetrical arrangement is almost invariably avoided—all is "bizarre," a medley of design, a medley of effect. The walls are made of plaster, and many curious plans are adopted to enhance the appearance. Sometimes glittering pebbles are intermixed, at others coloured sands are used, while again iron dust is sprinkled on the walls before they dry; this oxydising gives a warm brownish-yellow tint to the whole. The pictures are stowed away and displayed, two or three at a time, a change being made whenever the owner feels a desire for a fresh "thing of beauty." Similarly the china is kept in a cupboard and examined on such occasions as a guest may chance to take an interest in the collection. Mention must, of course, be made of the screens, without which a room would not be complete. Of beautiful design and exquisite workmanship they are much admired by travellers, and are, as a consequence, to be seen in numbers of houses in this country which affect foreign tastes and eastern productions.

This and much more in the same strain Mr. Morse tells us in his really beautiful book, with its 300 illustrations, many of them fine and all of them good. The work may be read with pleasure, but its charm consists rather in the advantage to be derived from an insight into the tastes and fancies of a people with whom quaintness is a virtue, and monotony a vice—a people who cultivate artistic propriety, and study picturesque effect. From such a race Englishmen have much to learn, and many a hint may be gathered from "Japanese Homes and their Surroundings," a work at once intelligent in its conception and thoughtful in its execution, pleasant to read, and profitable to study.

AN AMERICAN IN NORWAY.*

Norway is emphatically "out of the Hurly-burly" of the European Continent. Colonial interests, the present bone of contention between European Governments, it has none worth mentioning. And, with scarce an exception, it has never interfered, and is never likely to interfere, in the affairs of Dame Europa's Academy. At the time when London is "empty,"—that is, when a couple of hundred thousand of its four millions of inhabitants have temporarily left it—Norway is a favourite fishing and sporting ground. (Chiefly, however, for the wealthy; for "the general" do not seem to realise that Norway is not really an expensive country.) In society, one hears of huge specimens of Salmo-Salar being "gaffed," or landed, of bears and reindeer falling victims to a good shot; and one occasionally reads gushing descriptions of the North Cape and its vicinity, written by people who have travelled many leagues in order to be able to say that they have "interviewed" the "Midnight Sun."

Yet all this is not Norway; Norway with its pure, simple-minded, unsophisticated inhabitants, their primitive customs, and their language—the latter holding, as it were, an even balance between the original German and its English offshoot, yet betraying at every turn, to the English reader or hearer, how largely his own tongue (like his own character) has borrowed from the "hardy Norseman."

But what we do not find in most works—what, in fact, we find in very few—is certainly offered us in this unpretentious volume; a pleasantly written story, the incidents of which are so varied as to illustrate, down to the minutest details, Norwegian social life in the upper middle class: the class, that is, which is most seen by properly introduced travellers; and which "Remote from towns pursues its godly race,

And ne'er has chang'd, nor wish'd to change, its place."

"Godly" the Norwegian emphatically is. There is no parade of religion; but there is no mistaking its influence on its professors. Crimes of violence are rare, and are duly reprobated and punished; but general, and unspeakable, aversion is reserved for what are to—use a Latin phrase in its original sense—flagitious offences, those which imply an absence of honourable feeling on the part of the delinquent; no merit compensating for the want of "Ærlighed" (German Ehrlichkeit) the quality of being "open and above-board," "upright and down-straight, like a yard of pump-water," as our Southern peasantry phrase it.

The story before us is that of an American and an Englishman, who, travelling in Norway, woo, not in vain, two of the daughters of the Amtmand (or Prefect of a District), to whom they had introductions. It may easily be conceived that such a narrative would readily lend itself to a minute description of Norse household life: with which, and with the language, the author is evidently most familiar. Indeed, he is not content with being so himself, but tries to initiate his readers, by interjecting an occasional Norse word where the context makes its meaning reasonably clear. For instance:—

"Kom hid, kom hid, snart,"

Come hith(er), come hith(er), smart.

* "An American in Norway." By John Fulford Vicary. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

That, in the event, the course of true love does, for once, run smooth. we need hardly say. The American, indeed, was in such a hurry to have the irrevocable knot tied that he almost wanted, like Artemus Ward, to be "made 1 that very night." "To make a man wait when he wants to be married is," said he, "a tyranny begotten of effete monarchical despotism." No one will regret perusing this more than readable book, to which an additional interest is given by the insertion (as chapter-headings, or in the text) of many Scandinavian songs, with really good translations; some of which may well attract the notice of those who love to clothe words in music.

THE BADMINTON LIBRARY OF SPORTS AND PASTIMES.*

The interest in horsemanship universally felt by Englishmen—who ought to have been, if they were not, the prototype of the Centaurs of old—ensures a favourable reception to any book, of the horse, horsey, which is written by an author, or authors, thoroughly conversant with the subject in hand. Such a book, by writers whose exceptional fitness for their self-imposed task no one will venture to question, is a most welcome addition to the Badminton Library. Beginning with the half-wild animal which, saddled, or yoked to a scythe-armed chariot, more than once carried death and terror to the disciplined legions of Rome, we have here the history of the British racehorse from the time when, in the ninth-century racehorses, or, as they were originally termed, running horses, were sent by Hugh Capet as an offering to our King Athelstane (whose sister he was soliciting in marriage), to the present period. Richard I., Edward III., Henry VIII., were all patrons of the course. Under Elizabeth we hear that racing "ceased to be a great public amusement"; but the next Queen regnant made up for her predecessor's deficiencies in this respect, for "Good Queen Anne" ran (p. 24) horses in her own name; while the Father of the turf, Tregonwell Frampton (the story of whose atrocious cruelty to his horse, Dragon, is justly regarded by the authors as apocryphal), was "keeper of the running horses" at Newmarket to four successive Sovereigns.

The brief historical sketch is appropriately followed by a few words as to the various breeds which have combined to make the modern racehorse what it is; and the conclusion arrived at by the authors in a subsequent chapter (p. 112) is noteworthy, "that the quality and beauty of our horses are entirely attributable to the Eastern blood which we have imported, and that our climate yields to none in its 'inherent capabilities' for breeding." Conclusions in which, we think, most persons competent to express an opinion will concur.

To speak of racing is to speak of the Jockey Club, and here it is not a little singular to find that the origin of this world-renowned institution is in a manner (p. 56) obscure, though the date of its formation is commonly believed to be 1750, previously to which date all the research of our authors has failed to ascertain beyond doubt "whether racing affairs were ruled over by a committee or were entirely under Royal control." Of Newmarket, the headquarters of the Club, we have a very complete account, and one which even the initiated reader will hardly peruse without finding somewhat new to him.

The more practical chapters trace the history of the individual Equine "from the cradle to the grave," detailing the treatment to which he is subject as a yearling, as a two, and as a three-year-old animal. It would be impossible, within moderate compass, to enter into detail on these subjects, without introducing technicalities for which our columns are scarcely an appropriate place. But we can only say that on no point, on which the owner of racehorses needs information, will he fail here to find it. He is not only furnished with hints for his own guidance, but is told in what manner he should, in various circumstances, comport himself as regards the trainers and the jockeys whom he may see reason to employ. Nor is the very great difference in his relations with them, which the unprecedented prevalence among them of betting (for which a regular "backing syndicate" exists) has brought about, in any way shirked.

To the general question of betting a very important chapter (the last) is devoted. We have but one fault to find with it. Why do the authors use βελίον καλῶ when, apropos of the betting book, misquoting poor old Æschylus? We fear most people would have preferred κακῶ as more in accordance with their own experience. For the chapter itself, as for the work generally, we have nothing but praise. If the demonstration given at pp. 248-9, that it is simply impossible for anyone betting with "the ring" to win in the long run, does not give pause to every reader who may be tempted in that direction, such must be given up as "gone coons."

A carefully prepared appendix, printed at the end of the volume (pp. 373-407), contains the complete pedigrees of some of the most typical of successful racers, and thoroughly corroborates the opinion formed by the authors of the surpassing value of Eastern blood in horses. It fitly concludes a most valuable and interesting work, for producing which the public owe its writers sincere thanks.

STEEPLECHASING.

This subject is introduced by a preface from the pen of the editor of the series, the Duke of Beaufort, containing a graceful tribute to the sterling sportsmanlike qualities, and especially to the excellence as a rider, of one of the authors, Mr. Arthur Coventry. The name of the sport indicates its origin, and, considering the hazardous and somewhat "dare-devil" character which, in the first instance, it assumed, it is scarcely matter of surprise to hear that "Ireland seems to have been the land of its birth." One of the early recorded matches was in good sooth a "steeple" chase, being "from the Church of Buttevant to the spire of St. Leger Church." Very high speed does not, in the first instance, seem to have been attained, for we hear of the St. Albans' Steeplechase in 1833 being won by a horse who "had been bought for eighteen pounds, with his sinews quite callosed from hard work out of a water-cart, but," it is added, "he could jump undeniably."

Gradually the sport was in a manner systematised, Liverpool becoming its headquarters, but as it "grew popular it grew infamous," and the Jockey Club refusing "to take cognisance of any disputes connected with hurdle-racing or steeplechasing," things went, in the absence of any controlling authority, from bad to worse; nor was it until 1866 that the National Hunt Committee having been formed, something like order and decency was introduced into the meetings. Speed, too, was by no means neglected, and the joint authors clearly show (p. 291), to our surprise, that "a Grand National is run at what is almost the pace of the Derby," though the former abounds in artificial obstacles, and is thrice the length of the Epsom course.

Passing from what has been achieved to the selection of the "chaser," and the means which have, with each, to be adopted to ensure success, the authors call attention (pp. 282, 289, 293) to the singular adaptability of Irish horses—the manner of schooling them as "chasers," in that country being explained at p. 301—for this form of sport. The selection and schooling of horses for this purpose form the titles of two chapters abounding in useful practical hints derived from actual experience. A further and important division of the work relates to "Riding the race;" and respecting this the reader is treated to many amusing anecdotes of blunders originating in over-confidence or inexperience. The excessive use of the whip and spur is most justly reprobated; and many a man, who thinks that riding consists in bringing down the whip, with the most astounding gyrations of the arm, the greatest possible number of times in a minute, on his unhappy Rosinante, may ponder with profit the narrative of the Grand National, which was "won because the experienced guide, philosopher, and friend, of the successful rider took his whip away before the start."

A short, but useful, chapter on Hurdle-racing (for which sport the authors do not seem to entertain a consideration distinguée) and some invaluable hints to that numerous class, the "getters-up" of local meetings, complete the practical part of this admirable treatise, the closing chapter, replete with amusing anecdote, being devoted to "Famous Chasers and their Riders."

The volume will add, were this possible, to the popularity of the Duke of Beaufort's "venture." It is in every respect equal to its predecessors, and higher praise than this it would be difficult to give.

KIRKEE-MANUFACTURED AMMUNITION.—The Kirkee ammunition question, which was brought to such prominent notice by the bad shooting at Majuba, and resulted in the removal of a Colonel of Artillery from the Bombay Ordnance Manufacturing Department, and the suspension and subsequent death of the Chief Mechanical Engineer of the Factory, has been at last satisfactorily consigned to the past by the publication of a letter from the Government of India acknowledging the receipt of a letter of the 2nd February, 1886, bring to notice the high standard reached by the ammunition manufactured at the Small Arms Ammunition Factory, Kirkee, during the past year. The Government of India concur with the view that the results obtained are highly satisfactory and very creditable to Colonel A. Walker, R.A., and Captain J. L. Fixott, R.A., by whose energy and ability this improvement in the manufacture has been effected. The letter goes on to say:—"From reports received it is apparent that the ammunition turned out at Kirkee is, and has been for some time, as good as can be manufactured either at Woolwich or Dum-Dum. The Government of India has thus been relieved of all cause for anxiety in regard to the outturn of this ammunition, such as was occasioned by the large condemnations, which took place at the Kirkee Factory in 1882; and thanks of the Governor-General in Council should be conveyed to both Colonel Walker and Captain Fixott, for the very excellent work done by them."

THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

CAPTAIN RICHARD CARNAC TEMPLE read a very interesting and instructive paper before the meeting of the Indian Section of the Society of Arts on Friday evening, extracts from which will be found in another column, the demands upon our limited space preventing us from giving the paper in its entirety. The subject chosen was "The Everyday Life of Indian Women," and the object, professedly, was to put before an English audience a correct picture of that life with a view to ameliorate it by making it better and brighter through English influences. The importance of the subject will be at once acknowledged by all who have studied Indian questions in the light of experience, for such students know that the "regeneration of India," which is the cant phrase of the hour, is not to be accomplished in the way in which the best friends of India desire, until something more is done to enable the would-be reformers to win their way into the confidence or the inner domestic life of the people. Captain Temple's paper was a contribution towards this good and important end, and the reading of it should have attracted a greater number of the friends of India to the Society's room than were present. The paucity of attendance at any meeting in London, where Indian questions form the subject of discussion, is always a sorry commentary upon the interest which Englishmen pretend to take in the country which they are so ready to boast of as being the brightest gem in the Imperial Crown. Captain Temple has perhaps come to this opinion too, although he is not likely to be discouraged by the fact. He has shown himself during his fifteen years of Indian service to be actuated with a strong desire to become acquainted with the intricacies of Native life and language—studies which he has pursued con amore, and he has already given proof that he is a worthy successor—irrespective of any reminiscences of family names—of those soldier-civilians to whose devotion and intelligence England owes so much for the building up and strengthening of her Empire in the East. In treating, however, of his subject matter on Friday evening, he of course had to own that he spoke more from the results of reading and hearsay than from those of personal experience. "In endeavouring to go through the task I have been invited to undertake to-night, I am bound," he said, "to plead that as an Englishman I cannot do more than speak under correction. Hindu exclusiveness, as you all know, absolutely prohibits outsiders from personally observing what I am about to describe, and all that can possibly be done by persons such as I, is to procure all facts as nearly at first hand as practicable." This was so far good, but not altogether satisfactory. Captain Temple's own experiences of India have been confined chiefly, we believe, to the North-West Provinces and the Punjab, and here he was evidently at home. But the dark and dismal picture he drew of the everyday life of Indian women was not wholly correct as regards lower Bengal. There it is dark enough, but there are lights in it, even if these serve to throw out the shadows stronger. But in those lights are rays of hope which have been gathering for some time. Captain Temple speaks slightly of the efforts of the Zenáná missions to ameliorate the lot of Indian women, and of the results of their labours as almost nil. This is not the opinion of Europeans and Natives who know what has been accomplished in Calcutta and its neighbouring districts, and know also how the male heads of households, Mahomedan and Hindu, have directly or indirectly assisted the movement. These missions have paved the way greatly for the reception of the scheme which Lady Dufferin has so much at heart, and which Captain Temple seems to think is the one and only scheme likely to solve the problem of how to enlighten and elevate and make happier the women of India. He suggests no other solution likely to answer the purpose so well, and this, indeed, is the conclusion which he would seem to wish should be drawn from his lecture. "Her scheme is born of no mere emotional haste to do good, but is the result of a calm survey of the end to be desired, a clear mind as to how it is to be attained, an appreciation of the difficulties before her, and a firm determination to surmount them all." This may at once be granted, for no one could desire to detract in the smallest degree from the praise to which Lady Dufferin is entitled for the good work which she has taken in hand. But in justice to the truth and to the good work of others, it must be stated that her ladyship is cutting out no new path, but nobly widening and extending one which was commenced in former years under less happier auspices, when difficulties were greater and prejudices were stronger. Captain Temple is not, we are sure, trying to serve any interest but that of the truth, and indulges in no hyperbole in his conclusion that:—

The name of Harriet Dufferin will stand in affectionate remembrance in many thousands of households as among the greatest benefactors that the land has ever seen—long after the current political storms have vanished with the regions of history; long after the greatest of living reputations has died a natural death; and it may be long after the British Empire in the East has become a thing of the past.

But "honour to whom honour is due," in the past as well as in the present, and in rendering to Cæsar, or to Cæsar's wife, the things which are theirs, it should not be forgotten to render to humbler individuals the meed which is theirs also.

The doing of this will in no wise take away from the great and generous work to which Lady Dufferin has so nobly devoted herself, nor from the instruction and pleasure to be derived from the perusal of Captain Temple's admirable paper.

THE INDIAN AND COLONIAL EXHIBITION.

The number of visitors to this exhibition for the week ending May 22 was 140,533; total since the opening, 386,111.

On Wednesday last the Mohammedan artisans were granted by the Royal Commission a holiday, in order that they might observe their great festival—the Bakra'id.

The band of the 1st West Indian Regiment, which arrived in London a few days ago, will perform for the first time in public at the Exhibition this afternoon.

The experiment in washing and manipulating the "blue-ground," imported from the Griqualand West Diamond Mines, took place under the direction of Sir Charles Mills, K.C.M.G., acting Executive Commissioner for the Cape of Good Hope, in the Cape Court of the Exhibition, on Saturday afternoon, May 15th, in the presence of a number of visitors, amongst whom were the Duke of Manchester, the Right Hon. Osborne Morgan, M.P., Sir John Swinburne, M.P., and others. Several diamonds were found in the course of the operation, which attracted a considerable crowd and excited an unusual amount of interest. The process will be repeated at stated times during the period of the Exhibition.

A somewhat interesting feature in connection with the Hongkong Court is the Hongkong Bazaar, which is located in two rooms overlooking the Conservatory at the Royal Albert Hall, and which illustrates the principal commodities which constitute the stock-in-trade of a Chinese retail vendor of assorted goods in Hongkong. Silks, blackwood, ivory carvings, fans, screens, crockery, and other commodities find a place in this collection, and the Bazaar is presided over by some Chinese traders, arrived expressly from Hongkong for the purpose. The Bazaar is open during the hours of the Exhibition, and articles purchased can be delivered at once to the addresses of the purchasers. In matters of difficulty a reference can be made to Mr. H. E. Wodehouse, the Special Commissioner from Hongkong.

Her Majesty the Queen visited the Colonial and Indian Exhibition on Friday morning. Her Majesty—accompanied by H.R.H. Princess Beatrice, and attended by Lady Southampton, General Gardiner, and Sir Henry Ponsonby—arrived at the Indian Museum Entrance of the Exhibition at quarter to eleven o'clock, where she was received by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G., the Executive President of the Royal Commission, and by Sir Philip Cunliffe-Owen, K.C.M.G., C.B., C.I.E., Secretary to the Royal Commission. Colonel Teesdale V.O., C.B., was in attendance on H.R.H., the Prince of Wales. Her Majesty was joined at the entrance by H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany, attended by Miss Collins. At the entrance to the West Indian Court the Band of the 1st West Indian Regiment, which have just arrived from the West Indies, were drawn up and played a selection of music. Lieutenant Norris, who is in charge of the Band, had the honour of being presented to Her Majesty. The Queen then proceeded, through the West Indian Court, where she was received by the Executive Commissioner, Mr. A. J. Adderley, C.M.G., to the British Guiana Section, where she was received by Mr. Hawtayne, the Executive Commissioner; and then visited the Hong Kong Section, where she was received by Mr. Wodehouse, the Special Commissioner from Hong Kong. Her Majesty also visited the Straits Settlements Section, where she was received by Mr. Swettenham, the Executive Commissioner. Her Majesty then proceeded to inspect the Agricultural Trophy in the Canadian Section, where she was received by Sir Charles Tupper, G.C.M.G., and Lady Tupper, who had the honour of presenting to Her Majesty a bouquet. Her Majesty then proceeded through the Queensland Court, where she was received by Mr. Garrick, C.M.G., the Executive Commissioner, and then through the Western Australian Court, where she was received by Mr. Malcolm Fraser, C.M.G., the Executive Commissioner, and Mr. Thomson, the Assistant Commissioner. Her Majesty passed through the New South Wales Court, where she was received by Sir Alexander Stuart, K.C.M.G., the Executive Commissioner, and by Captain Loftus, the Secretary to the Commission. On entering the Victorian Section Her Majesty was received by Mr. Graham Berry, Executive Commissioner, Mr. Bosisto, President of the Commission, and by Mr. Thomson, Secretary to the Commission. Her Majesty then entered the "Old London Street," and proceeded thence into the Indian Palace, where Her Majesty inspected the Natives at their work. Dr. Tyler, who is in charge of the Natives, was in attendance, and explained the various manufactures. The Queen, returning through the "Old London Street," passed through another section of the Victorian Court, into the Fiji Section, where she was received by Mr. James Mason, the Executive Commissioner; and then entered the South Australian Section, where she was received by Sir Arthur Blyth, K.C.M.G., the Executive Commissioner, and Sir Samuel Davenport, the Commissioner in charge of Exhibits. Her Majesty then re-entered Canada, and inspected the furs and the hunting trophy. Her Majesty made a few purchases of furs. The Queen then inspected the Geological Collection of the Canadian Section, and the various specimens were explained to her by Dr. Selwyn, who is in charge of this department. After leaving Canada Her Majesty entered the New Zealand Court, where she was received by Sir Francis Dillon Bell, K.C.M.G., the Executive Commissioner, and by Dr. Von Haast, C.M.G., the Commissioner in charge of exhibits. In the Cape Court Her Majesty was received by Sir Charles Mills, K.C.M.G., the acting Executive Commissioner, and by Mr. Sydney Cowper, the Secretary to the Commission. Her Majesty inspected the diamond washing and cutting machinery, as well as the Kaffirs, Bushmen, and Malays. Her Majesty then visited the Natal Section, where she was received by Sir William Charles Sargeant, K.C.M.G., the Executive Commissioner; and from there proceeded to the West African Court, where she was received by Sir James Marshall, the Executive Commissioner.

The Malays, Kaffirs, and other Natives were regarded with much interest; and to the Malays, who looked most picturesque in their bright costume, the Queen addressed a few words, asking after their health and how they liked their visit to England. On leaving the Exhibition, Her Majesty conveyed her thanks to Sir Charles Mills and the other Executive Commissioners for the very great pleasure the visit had afforded her.

Her Majesty then left the Exhibition by the Queen's Gate Entrance at a quarter-past twelve o'clock.

The Executive Commissioners of the Exhibition will be entertained at dinner by the St. George's Club, on the 16th of June; Sir Philip Cunliffe-Owen, the Secretary, will preside.

About a year ago the Nizam's Government appointed a Commission to inquire into certain debts alleged to be due by the State to money-lenders and others; and fifty claims, amounting to nearly five crores of rupees, were sent into the Commission. Nearly one half of these claims have already been rejected as incapable of proof, and, certainly, some of them appear to be rather preposterous. The claim of one, Pestonji Viccajee, a banker, for forty lakhs, was supported on the sole evidence of a passage in the "Memoirs of the late Sir Salar Jang," in which it was mentioned that the Government were indebted to the late Pestonji's firm to that amount. The greater part of the claims were made up of arrears of interest and compound interest, to such an extent that in one claim of ninety-six lakhs no less than eighty-eight lakhs are set down under these heads.

THE total opium revenue for the year 1885-6 is worse than the estimate by exactly Rs. 6,01,910. The falling off has been chiefly on the Bombay side, where the deficiency is no less than Rs. 4,96,950. It is decided that 55,000 chests will be sold in 1886-7, but the amount will probably run up to 60,000 chests before the anticipated advance of £312,900 on the estimated revenue is secured. The increased sale of Bengal opium is powerfully affecting the Malwa trade; and the process is likely to be developed by the year's transactions.

THERE seems to be no question that a number of the new recruits belonging to the 1st Goorkhas at Dharmasala have been attempting to desert and get back to Nepal. The fact has been represented to the Durbar as a serious drawback to the value of the new drafts they have been lately sending us. It may be that the Durbar has been impressing men forcibly, than which nothing could be more undesirable, as tending to ruin the popularity of the service; and in this case the best solution would be to allow our own recruiting parties access and liberty to do their best for themselves, instead of leaving the recruits to be provided by the Durbar. But this is what the Nepal authorities have always objected to. From other sources it would appear that the climate of the North-West agrees no better with the new Goorkhas than the Punjab, for from Dehra insubordination is reported on the part of some of the recruits of the new battalion of the 2nd Regiment of Goorkhas. Something not altogether unlike a mutiny is said to have occurred, one man drawing his kukerie on Colonel Becher, and another striking his subadar. All of the delinquents have, however, been brought to trial and sentenced to various terms of punishment.

THE movements for the relief of British and native troops in India, for the season of 1886-87, have been arranged. The Q Battery, 3rd Brigade, Royal Artillery will go from Saugor to Jubulpore, their place being taken by a Battery from England. The B Battery, 4th Brigade, now stationed at Meerut, go home; and a battery will be drafted out there. The C Battery, 4th Brigade, leave Nougong for England, as well as the F Battery, 4th Brigade, now stationed at Bareilly. These vacancies will be filled by a Battery from England. The G Battery at Jubulpore also return to England. There will be no changes in the British Cavalry. The 1st Battalion, Durham Light Infantry go from Allahabad to England, being supplanted by the 1st Battalion, East Surrey Regiment from Ranikhet, who will be succeeded by a regiment from England. The 1st and 12th Bengal Cavalry, now stationed at Peshawur and Nowshera effect a change, as do also the 3rd Bengal Cavalry, and 14th Bengal Lancers, now stationed at Sealkote and Thul Chotiali. The 5th and 6th Bengal Sappers and Miners, the former of which is serving in Burma, change their location between Roorkee and Rawal Pindi. The 13th Bengal Infantry, go from Peshawur to Allahabad, from which station the 20th Regiment go to Rawul Pindi, the 21st Regiment which is at present serving there being sent to relieve the 13th Regiment.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE command pay and adjutant's allowance of artillery commands will not be affected by any temporary reductions in the number of batteries in a division, district, or station for a period not exceeding six months; after the expiration of that period the allowances will be discontinued.

COLONEL C. M. BROWNE, R.E., on furlough, is appointed chief engineer and secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Burma, in the Public Works Department.

ON the recommendation of a Medical Board, Major-General Sir C. J. S. Gough, V.C., K.C.B., commanding the Allahabad Division, is permitted to proceed to England on furlough in anticipation of the furlough which will hereafter be granted him by Government of India.

THE staff salary of the 1st Assistant Adjutant-General, headquarters Bengal, and Assistant Adjutant-Generals, headquarters Madras and Bombay, has been altered from Rs. 600 per mensem to Rs. 500, with a special extra allowance of Rs. 100, payable to the officer actually performing the duties, whether permanently or officiating.

LIEUTENANT A. N. CARR, 3rd Bengal Cavalry, has been appointed Officiating Assistant Superintendent, Reserve Depot, Saharunpore.

MAJOR J. C. DUKE, West Riding Regiment, and Lieutenant G. J. Younghusband, Corps of Guides, have been detailed for employment in the Intelligence Branch, Quartermaster-General's Department.

THE following new order affecting Artillery commands has been issued. The command pay and Adjutant's allowance of Artillery Commands will not be affected by any temporary reductions in the number of batteries in a division, district, or station for a period not exceeding six months; after the expiration of that period, these allowances will be discontinued.

IT is very likely that Brigadier-General McQueen, C.B. and A.D.C., will return to the Punjab Frontier Force as Commandant pro tem., vice Sir McGregor, proceeding on furlough. General McQueen, although he has only been in command for about six months, will be much missed, as he has won the good will of all ranks. Colonel T. H. Way, M.S.C., Commandant 3rd Infantry, will doubtless—being senior field officer—officiate for the six months. Rumour has it that Colonel Turton, late of this force, will be appointed to the command. The claims of the officers of this force should not be overlooked. General Abbot was the only officer of the contingent who succeeded to the command of the force. Colonel Havelock having proceeded on privilege leave for three months, Captain A. Adye is officiating Commandant. Surgeon Doyle has been transferred to the 5th Infantry, vice Surgeon James, on furlough. Lieutenant Maguire, Adjutant, 2nd Cavalry, now in Europe, has obtained an extension of six months' leave. Captain Turner, R.A., has proceeded on sixty days' leave. Lieutenant Earle is officiating Commandant, No. 3 Field Battery, at Aurangabad. Dr. McVittie, 3rd Cavalry, H.C., is appointed Residency Surgeon, vice Dr. Lawrie. Captain Maltby, 2nd Infantry, Hingoli, has been appointed officiating Commandant as a temporary measure during Major Kennedy's absence on furlough. A reduction in the Medical Warrant Officers from nine to five is anticipated shortly. This step will materially increase the duties of the commissioned officers, who are already below the complement.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Ceremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D., M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary of the Church Missionary Society, Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Muhammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary World.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr. Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopædia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammadan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Mussalman faith, the information being in every case taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars. . . . This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Homeward Mail.

A GAZETTEER

OF THE TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT
OF THE VICEROY OF INDIA.

BY

EDWARD THORNTON.

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE, C.I.E.
(Formerly Press Commissioner in India, &c.),

AND

ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E.,

H.M. INDIAN (HOME) SERVICE.

(Translator of the Anvár-i-Suhail, &c.)

When Thornton's "Gazetteer of India" was originally presented to the public, it was the only compilation of its kind, and it was obviously desirable that, within reasonable limits, the work should be sufficiently comprehensive to give the reader some insight into the history of the various localities enumerated. Since that date, however, Hunter's "Imperial Gazetteer" has been prepared, which is not only much more ample than its predecessor, but is still to be greatly enlarged in the New Edition now in course of production. In these circumstances it has been thought incumbent, when issuing a New Edition of Thornton's "Gazetteer" corrected up to date, to modify in some measure the plan of the work by omitting much of the retail, and giving only such leading facts and figures as will suffice for ordinary purposes of reference, a plan which has the additional advantage of reducing the work to one moderate-sized volume.

It is obvious that the value of the New Edition must depend in a large measure upon the care and judgment which have been exercised in the preparation of the letter-press. The task was, in the first instance, undertaken by Sir Roper Lethbridge, whose literary attainments and acquaintance with India were considered to qualify him to a marked degree for an undertaking demanding considerable knowledge and experience. In order, further, to render the work as complete and perfect as is possible, the Publishers deemed it prudent to subject the pages to the scrutiny of a second Editor, in the person of Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, whose lengthened experience gives to his criticism an unusual degree of weight and importance. The joint names which appear on the title-page will, it is hoped, serve as a guarantee to the public that the "Gazetteer" is in the main accurate and trustworthy, free alike from sins of omission and commission. It will be found to contain many hundreds of place not included in any former edition, while the areas and populations have been revised by the data given in the Census Report of 1881.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb,
and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to
Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals
throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public
are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

W. THORNHILL &amp; CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and élite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pearls and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

THE BROAD ARROW AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.
ESTABLISHED 1833.

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 14th May; from Calcutta, Allahabad and Madras to the 12th May.

THE telegraph line from Moulmein to Myaddy, being the British section of the Moulmein Bangkok telegraph, was completed on the 25th March. The work on the Siamese section from Raheng is being vigorously prosecuted by that Government, and will, it is expected, be completed before the rains.

THE Finance Committee are now busy examining into the military expenditure, each department being taken in turn.

THE Garstin Dacoity case has ended in the acquittal of the prisoners, including the Zemindar of Bodynainkanoor. Prisoner No. 12, the approver, was sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment as either a self-convicted dacoit or a perjurer.

THE installation of the Maharajah of Cashmere took place amid great festivities on May 10th. Mr. Plowden, the acting Resident, represented the supreme authority.

H.H. THE BEGUM OF BHOPAL has appointed Colonel H. C. E. Ward, of the Central Province Commission, her chief minister, on the recommendation of Sir Lepel Griffin, and with the sanction of the Viceroy. She has abolished all transit duties hitherto levied on that portion of the Bhopal-Indore road which runs through her territories.

THE MAHARAJAH OF KUCH BEHAR has finally abandoned his idea of going to England this year. He will probably remain at Kuch Behar throughout the hot weather or go to Darjiling in August.

THE report by the Transport Committee, of which General East was president after the Delhi Camp, is now under consideration at Army Headquarters. The Commander in Chief will probably make various recommendations for transport improvement.

A STRICT inquiry is being instituted into the failure of the tents supplied to the Afghan Boundary Commission.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL P. A. CARNEGIE has arrived at Secunderabad to assume command of the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL HARTMAN, lately commanding at Bhamo, is now in Simla.

THE Amir of Kabul has been ill, but is now reported to have recovered. He has appeared again in Durbar.

AT Herat considerable loss of life and property was caused by the snowstorm of the 29th March.

THE Minister has completed a scheme for the reduction of the Nizam's Irregular Troops, which will shortly be submitted to his Highness. It is said to be not unlikely, if the Minister's proposals are accepted, that reductions to the extent of seven or eight thousand men will be effected, involving a saving of some three or four lakhs in the military expenditure of the State.

ENTERIC fever is very prevalent among the European troops at several stations in the North-West Provinces, especially at Lucknow, where there are said to be over forty cases in hospital, including an officer.

THE British India trade by land with foreign countries in the ten months ending January 31st increased by Rs. 57,56,329 as compared with the corresponding period last year.

THE Statesman libel case was adjourned on Saturday last for a month, Mr. Robert Knight and Mr. Barlow, the defendant editor and printer respectively of that journal, being enlarged on heavy bail.

DURING the official year ending the 31st of March last, the net imports of gold into India amounted to Rs. 2,75,32,213, and the net imports of silver to Rs. 11,60,56,285. The total imports of gold came to Rs. 3,08,18,209, and of silver to Rs. 15,46,70,808. The amount of silver coined and examined was Rs. 10,27,06,162.

MR. HALLIDAY, of Patna, will shortly join the Bengal Board of Revenue.

MR. G. D. BURGESS, Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of British Burma, is confirmed in his officiating appointment as Commissioner of the Arrakan Division, in the place of Colonel E. B. Sladen, and Mr. E. S. Symes becomes Secretary.

DR. ANDREW DEANE, officiating Civil Surgeon of Benares, proceeds to Kashmir this season as medical officer.

REPRESENTATIONS have been made to the Nepal Durbar regarding the Goorkha recruits sent for our new battalions.

A THOUSAND of the new police and six hundred of the Frontier Military Police have reached Burma from Calcutta.

THE Commands in Upper Burma are now as follows:—General White in Chief Command; Brigadier-General Griffiths, Madras, Commanding the Bhamo district; Brigadier-General Anderson, Bombay, Commanding the Mandalay district; and Brigadier General Low, Bengal, Commanding the Yemethen district. ## Notes of the Week.

A TELEGRAM from Simla, dated May 28th, gives us the latest official intimation from Mandalay that "the area of complete pacification in Burma is rapidly extending."

THE long telegram which the Calcutta correspondent of the Times sends to that journal this morning consists chiefly of a summary of the views of the Presidency Chamber of Commerce on some matters within and on several outside of the functions of that useful body. The heinous practice of "marking a piece of goods with incorrect stamps of length" no doubt belongs to the former category, and it may interest some persons to know that although, in the opinion of the Calcutta Chamber, "this practice threatens to seriously damage the reputation of British commerce," yet the Manchester Chamber "does not see its way to check it."

BUT the Indian Chamber, through its President, gives its views on wider questions. "Mr. Crikshank passed over the Burmese war and the annexation with a few words of approval," but he called the attention of the Government to several matters of State importance, demanding to know, for instance, "why the report of the military commission had not been fully carried into effect." It might, perhaps, be thought impertinent to ask (but it may be that the question will be asked), what has the Chamber of Commerce to do with this matter?

UPON another matter—that of the annual migration of the Government headquarters to Simla—the interest taken by the Chamber can be easily understood. The presence of the Viceroy and all the Departments at Calcutta helps to make pleasure and profit for certain sections of the community—that composing the mercantile and trading sections being specially interested; but to talk of this migration "helping to accentuate the foreign character of British rule and threatening to become a danger to the Empire," is to talk nonsense. If Simla, as an official station, was abolished to-morrow, it does not follow that Calcutta would be retained as the abiding home of all future Viceroys and heads of Departments.

THE new furlough rules are not being received with gratitude altogether by the younger officers whom they are supposed to benefit. In the voluminous correspondence which the publication has brought forth, several anomalies have been pointed out. It is asked, for instance, why, if officers have leave to their credit, they should not be allowed to take such leave out of India? These officers are but few, and it would not have caused any injury to the Service or to individuals to have allowed in such cases a year's leave out of India on the same terms as leave in India.

AGAIN it is complained that the "drones" of the army, if any such there be, who have taken an excess of leave will, under the new rules, be able to retire on larger pensions than under the 1868 rules. A correspondent gives an instance of this: "An officer of thirty-six years' service under the 1868 rules is allowed four years' leave, but this officer has had over seven years. The pension due to him under the old rules would have been £130, but under the new, as all leave counts for service, his pension will be £571." The moral evidently to be drawn is to get—"more leave."

A correspondent writes to a Bombay paper:—

An officer serving in India now gets less than seventy-five per cent. of his pay. It is surely time something was done to lessen this grievance. A young officer has pointed out to me that his pay per month in India exceeds that of his rank at home for the same period, by the vast sum of one shilling and threepence half-penny; and to add to this the insurance company have doubled the premium on his life policies. Now, if a young officer, with no wife or family, has just cause for so much complaint, I leave it to you to judge what I and married men lose, who have to transmit money home for their families.

This is a sad and true complaint, but what is to be done? The eyes of all in India are looking to Simla—where sits the Silver Committee—for help. But the Committee can only suggest Bi-metallism. The subaltern would prefer the simpler plan recommended by a military contemporary—allow remittances at 1s. 9d. But who is to pay the loss?

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.—The number of visitors to this Exhibition for the week ending Saturday was 160,170. Total since the opening 546,281.

THE INDIAN VOLUNTEERS.—It is interesting to learn the Native view of the action of the Government of India in the matter of Rifle Volunteers. Here is one opinion, which we need scarcely say comes from Bengal:—"Nameless Eurasians black and tawny, even Negroes, can become Volunteers, but a thousand and one difficulties crop up when the Natives demand the privilege of enrolment. The long and the short of the thing is Government cannot trust the Natives, lest when armed they should massacre the entire European population, from the Viceroy down to the smallest Englishman. But it does not look well this in so many words, therefore the Viceroy has expatiated on the loyalty of the Natives." We admit that the warlike spirit for which the Bengalis are so renowned is a cause of anxiety to the Government; the puny races of the Upper Provinces could not hold their own if the Bengalis rose in arms, and even the 60,000 Native soldiers now located in the Punjab, to say nothing of the 8,000 or 9,000 Goorkhas who are enrolled in the regular army, would not have a chance against the high-spirited Volunteers of Bow Bazaar and Collingah. It does not matter that a Bengali has never handled a rifle in his life. "Sir, our moral courage would enable us to overcome the terror caused by the flash and report of the gun," was a remark which cannot fail to convince even the most sceptical of the fitness for arms of the martial races which people Bengal—albeit they do not furnish a man to the regular Army—and one may therefore sympathise deeply with the disappointment to which the Government decision on the Volunteer Question has given rise. "Natives can fight best under Natives" is the opinion of another Bengal journalist, writing, doubtless, with a full knowledge of military subjects.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 30

At the annual meeting of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce on Wednesday last, the President, the Hon. D. Cruickshank, delivered a most interesting and important address, in which he reviewed at considerable length several questions which have occupied the attention of the public during the past year. Treating first of railway extension, he strongly urged on the Government the pressing necessity for commencing the construction of the Bengal-Nagpore line, and expressed a hope that there was no truth in the rumour that the question of the gauge on that line was to be reopened. It was hardly conceivable, he said, that any one could be found in favour of a break of gauge on a trunk line running through a rich productive country, and connecting two such ports as Bombay and Calcutta. Then, after referring to some matters of local importance, such as the Hooghly Railway-bridge and the Calcutta docks, he returned to subjects of more general interest. One of these was a practice which threatens to seriously damage the reputation of British commerce—that, namely, of marking a piece of goods with incorrect stamps of length. Representations had, he remarked, been made to the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, but unfortunately that body did not see its way to the checking of this reprehensible practice. Mr. Cruickshank passed over the Burmese War and of annexation with a few words of approval, and said that while recognising the valuable services rendered by Mr. Colquhoun and Mr. Hallett in their explorations in the Indo-Chinese peninsula, the Chamber was unable, on the information at present available, to decide on the merits of the various schemes for opening up trade with Western China.

The remainder of the speech was chiefly devoted to a consideration of the financial situation. The Chamber was, Mr. Cruickshank said, unable to agree with Sir A. Colvin's view that the remissions of taxation in 1882 had been justified by the results. On the contrary, they considered that those remissions had been premature and unnecessary; while the surpluses by which it was sought to justify them had been obtained by sacrificing the efficiency of the army and neglecting the defence of the frontier. The present Income-tax, which, he feared, might become permanent, was really the outcome of the policy of 1882. Accepting the necessity for direct taxation, there did not seem to be much objection to the form which it had taken; but the measure would certainly be unpopular, and great care should be taken to prevent oppression and extortion by the subordinates employed in the collection. The reduction of the salt duty had not realised the expectation that increased consumption would make up for the loss of revenue. Then there was the very serious question of exchange. Many authorities held that a fall in silver benefited producers, and stimulated exports. Mr. Cruickshank was, however, forced to the conclusion that it was a mistake to suppose the Indian wheat grower obtained higher prices by reason of a fall in the exchange. The increased exports was rather due to the extension of railways, to cheaper rates of carriage, and to lower freights. Nor did it appear that any rise in the price of linseed or indigo had followed the depreciation of silver; while the price of tea had shown a considerable decline. Fluctuations in the value of the rupee and of articles of export and import had occurred owing to varying seasons and other causes; but prices generally throughout the country had not been affected. There could be no question, he thought, regarding the desirability of adopting any measure likely to prevent a further fall in the value of silver in relation to gold; but much doubt existed whether bi-metallism afforded a satisfactory solution of the difficulty, and public opinion was not yet prepared to accept that remedy.

There was one other matter to which he would refer—namely, the task before the committee which was now sitting at Simla for the purpose of examining into the expenditure and reporting what economies were practicable. A general impression prevailed that many Government departments were overgrown, but it was impossible as a rule for "outsiders" to say what reductions could be made. Still they could indicate the subjects for inquiry by the committee. It would be interesting to know why the report of the military commission had not been more fully carried into effect. There was the system of procuring Government stores from England, and there seemed room for economy in the custom-house and dockyard departments. Then there was the old grievance regarding the location of the Government offices in the hills for eight months yearly. It was rumoured that the Finance Committee was considering whether it would not be more economical to keep the offices permanently at Simla, only the heads of departments with small staffs visiting the plains for a month or two in the winter. Put in this way there could be hardly a doubt regarding the decision of the Committee, composed chiefly of Government officers, deeply imbued with official traditions and surrounded with the influences which existed at Simla, where all would favour residence in the hills regardless of any interests but their own. The political aspects of the question, and the effects on the administration and the country of a withdrawal of the Government to a remote corner of the Empire, surrounded with interests and influences altogether official, might not be matters falling within the province of the Committee to consider. But the public would expect it to ascertain and make known what civilians had hitherto in vain attempted to discover—the actual expense of the annual migration. It was said that the large sums expended on public buildings at Simla would be put forward as a reason for making it the permanent capital; but then what was to be done with the extensive offices at Calcutta? The public would not allow the headquarters of Government to be permanently fixed in the hills without a strong protest. No one would object to the Viceroys, who were generally past middle age and were unused to a warm climate, spending the hot weather on the hills; but there was no reason why they should carry all the Government offices with them at a heavy expense to the country. It was an outrage on common-sense to allege that men acclimatised by several years of residence could only perform the work of certain offices in the hills, while their contemporaries in the services were able to remain in the plains all the year round. He trusted that the public would let its voice be heard and not allow the perpetuation of a system which he described as a scandal to the Administration and an imposition on the taxpayer, helping to accentuate the foreign character of British rule and threatening to become a danger to the Empire. The President concluded by reading a long extract from a minute of the late Sir Henry Durand on the importance of retaining Calcutta as the Indian capital.

On the same day on which this address was delivered one of the subjects treated by Mr. Cruickshank—namely, bimetallism—occupied the attention of a meeting held in Simla, under the auspices of the lately-formed Silver Association. The occasion was a lecture delivered by Mr. Molesworth, who strongly advocated bimetallism, remarking that it was neither a new nor an untried system, but that it had stood the test of experience in difficult circumstances. Sir A. Colvin, in proposing a vote of thanks, said that the attitude taken by English economists had been the source of all their troubles, and to endeavour to change that attitude was the main duty of the Indian Government. The late Mr. Bagehot had said, in 1877, that the fall in silver would be only temporary. Sir A. Colvin believed that if Mr. Bagehot were now alive, with the experience of the past ten years behind him, he would be a staunch bimetallist. It was necessary to continually enforce upon the English mind the extent of Indian experience on the subject in the hope of inducing the English people, instead of passing by on the other side, to stop and aid India in her distress; and it should be made perfectly clear that Indian commerce was prejudiced by the depreciation in silver.

The lamented death of General Hughes, after barely four months' tenure of office as Military Member of Council, has reopened the question of the succession to that important post. Public opinion in India points unmistakably to General Chesney as being, beyond doubt, the best of all possible candidates. It was a matter of much surprise and not a little disappointment that his claims were overlooked on the occasion of the last vacancy. At a time like the present, when the Government is endeavouring to combine the utmost economy in the military administration with the maximum of efficiency, it is in the highest degree important that the Indian War Department should be under a thoroughly competent head. It is doubtful if any officer has a greater mastery of all the details of the Indian military system or a more complete grasp of military finance than General Chesney; and it is earnestly to be hoped that Lord Kimberley will not lose the present opportunity of securing his services. Meanwhile, the Viceroy has appointed Colonel Newmarch to act temporarily as Military Member.

A cyclone of some severity passed over Madras on Sunday last. Some native ships were caught in the harbour, driven from their moorings, and wrecked on the breakwater. The loss of life was small. It would seem to be time to consider—as is suggested by an Indian newspaper—whether it is advisable to spend any more money on Madras Harbour, seeing that to be caught by a cyclone within it means almost certain destruction, and that the first step taken when bad weather is threatening is to direct all ships to put out to sea.

The Maharajah of Manipore died on the 20th inst., and some troubles have followed, owing to a pretender having set up a claim to the throne. He was, however, defeated by the rightful heir, after some fighting. Two hundred of the frontier police and a party of the 4th Native Infantry have been sent to help the new Maharajah. It will be remembered that the late Maharajah, co-operating with Colonel Johnstone, the British Resident, rendered valuable assistance last winter in saving some employés of the Bombay and Burma Company in the Chindwin valley.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, MAY 30.

The constantly recurring rumour of the death of the Ameer was revived last week, and traced, as on many previous occasions, to the Peshawur bazaar. Abdurrahman Khan is known to be suffering from gout; but there is happily no reason to believe that he is dead.

THE MISSION TO TIBET.

CALCUTTA, MAY 30.

Rumours continue current regarding the alleged difficulties in the way of the mission to Tibet; but it is stated, on the other hand, that the Chinese Ampa, or Resident, at Lhassa, has sent a deputation to meet Mr. Macaulay at the frontier, and that the three principal Lamas have arrived there for the same purpose. It is believed that the mission will set out this week.

BURMA.

PAGAN, MAY 30.

Letters, dated the 25th inst., received from Bhamo report the progress of Colonel Fitzgerald's column. This force, about 700 strong, with four guns and a Hazara mountain battery, and consisting of detachments of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, the Bengal Sappers, the 26th Punjab Infantry, and a Hazara battery, left Bhamo on the 19th, and marched to the Mansis station, at the foot of the Kachyen mountains. After completing all the necessary arrangements, the column started from Mansis on the morning of the 22nd, and commenced the ascent of the mountains. On the evening of that day General Griffith, in command at Bhamo, received an apology from the Kachyen Tsanbwa, whom the expedition is sent to punish, for the outrages which he had committed. As Tsanbwa did not come in himself, the troops continued their march, and on the morning of the 24th reached Karrar, ten miles from Mansis, and at the same distance from Kabanon, the Tsanbwa's town, which was the objective point of the expedition. The enemy's troops were turned out of several strong positions. The scouting and general behaviour of the 26th Punjab Infantry and the Bengal Sappers in this very difficult country are reported to have been excellent. The weather was very bad, with continued heavy rain, the monsoon having set in. Colonel Fitzgerald reports the troops to be in good spirits. The rebels were constantly firing into the camp. On the morning of the 25th the troops advanced on Kabanon. The force sent is a strong one for the work to be done, but General White considered it best to make such a show of strength as would overawe the neighbouring tribes, and if possible settle once for all the question of our military supremacy over the Kachyens.

Mandalay is tranquil.

The insurgents on the 27th inst. burnt Taleik, a town on the Myitme river, to the south of Mandalay. It had been decided to occupy Taleik on the 28th as a military post, and the insurgents appear to have received information of the intended movement.

Owing to the fact of the monsoon having set in all active military operations, except along the rivers, will be suspended for some months to come.

We have received from the India Office the following:—From Viceroy, 26th May:—"Lieutenant Joseph Fitz Gerard MacCarthy, 1st Durham Light Infantry, attached to 26th Bengal Infantry, died of wounds on 12th of May, received in skirmish with Kachins on 8th of May. No. 536, Private George Leatherby, 2nd Battalion Somersetshire Light Infantry, severely wounded at Piazee, Upper Burma, on the 16th of May."

The Secretary of State for India has ordered that the Savings Bank balances at credit of Warrant Officers of the Indian Army, deposited by them prior to the 1st April, 1884, while they were non-commissioned officers, may, subject to the prescribed limit of Rs. 3,000, be remitted to England at the exchange of 2s. 0½d. the rupee. Such remittances may be made at any time during their services in India in the manner prescribed in clause 89, India Army Circulars, 1884.

NAGA HILLS.—There has been a marked development of internal trade in the Naga Hills, always a healthful sign, and considerable improvement has been effected in opening up communications. A new feature in the commerce of the Naga Hills was established during last year, namely, a trade in lime from the Nambor forest. A cart-road has been made connecting this place with the Dinapur and Golaghat road. Lime obtained from this source will, it is hoped, be able to compete with what is imported from Sylhet circuitously via Goalundo. Introduction of a settled Government into the Naga Hills has been followed by an appreciable and gradually widening development of trade, a cessation of intervillage wars, an extension of cultivation, agricultural stimulation, and, as a legitimate result, marked improvement in the condition of poor classes. In a simple form, and to a limited extent, a taste for the luxuries of civilisation has also been engendered, and Angami Nagas now not unfrequently invest some of their superfluous specie in umbrellas, tobacco, and sugar. Heavy demand for labour has caused a large sum of money to pass into possession of Nagas and others in the district, and this has been invested in cattle and in opening out new land, all tending to increase general prosperity.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE INDIAN EXHIBITION.

(Pioneer.)

There seems good reason to anticipate that the industrial and so-called ethnological department of the Exhibition may really achieve a substantial result in the direction of bringing the untravelled British public into something resembling the attitude of mind about India attained by other persons of better opportunities, who may have had the advantage of actually visiting this country. High art enthusiasts may not care much, as a feature of an Indian exhibition, for the regiment of life-size painted figures representing the various races of people inhabiting India, their costumes and provincial characteristics, and the soldiers of all sorts constituting the Native army of India, to be distributed about the vestibule of the Exhibition and in the different sections of the industrial department. But these figures will teach the British public, not, perhaps, as we were almost saying, more about India than all the rest of the Exhibition put together, but at all events they will give a life and meaning to the rest of the Exhibition which could not have been infused into it in any other way. The industrial products with which the national life of the people whose typical aspects are thus illustrated is associated will be lying all round, and the stupendous geography with which they are concerned will grow intelligible to the visitor as he roams about. One can hardly imagine an Englishman, of any mental capacity worth speaking of, spending a day in the Oriental courts of South Kensington from this date onwards till the autumn closes without coming away inspired, so to speak, with a consciousness of India—not merely as a name in books and newspapers, but as a vast theatre of human life and activity, the grand interests of which ought, for Englishmen who realise their relations with it, to dwarf the petty wrangling of Parliamentary politics—instead of waiting, as they have to do now, in the background till leading statesmen stand aside for a few moments' rest from the never-ending war of rival selfishness that constitutional democracy provokes.

In one way, indeed, the Exhibition can hardly invest visitors with an adequate consciousness of India. It can do little or nothing towards making them understand the intellectual and moral civilisation of India with its grandeur in some directions and its terrible limitations in others. A South Kensington display may deal very effectually with art and industry, but thought and culture are intangible elements of a nation's life, and do not lend themselves to illustration. We have not yet been told, indeed, whether the ethnological section will introduce to Londoners the outward form and appearance of the Anglicised Hindu graduate of the Calcutta or any other University. Probably the preparation of the figures has been carried on with some eye to the picturesque, in which case coats and trousers, even of the Oriental cut, will have been avoided by the ethnological artists. But in any case, were there even Bengali Babus in wood and plaster grouped amongst the effigies of the Indian populace, that help would not go far towards interpreting modern-educated India to the spectator. Still more entirely impossible would it be for any appeal made to the eye by an exhibition, to give the faintest hint to the spectator's mind, of the ancient intellectual civilisation associated with this country, which lies far in the background behind all the phenomena of modern Indian progress. Up to this time this is appreciated only by the small band of Sanscrit scholars, and scarcely at all by practical men engaged in the current work of the world, whether in this country or in Europe. The ancient literature of India is in process of translation, but its interpretation has hardly begun. Meanwhile, in various directions fine metaphysical conceptions are beginning to emerge from the apparent crudities of Indian symbology, and—for example, in the recent controversy concerning Mr. Gladstone's views of Genesis—learned disputants are now ready to refer to the conceptions of Hindu philosophy as underlying some of the primary achievements of Greek thought. The modern currents of Native thought may not have worthily represented the traditions of the past, and corrupt institutions foisted on the fundamental doctrines of Brahminical philosophy in relatively recent centuries—widow burnings, infant marriages, and caste whimsicalities of many foolish and pernicious kinds—may have led European observers to take a prejudiced view of Hindu morals and mental culture. But still in the background lies a reserve of ancient Indian civilisation, which must not be ignored by any one who would understand India correctly. It might even be contended that it ought not to be ignored by those who would govern India beneficially. But, at all events, it is, as we say, beyond the scope of artistic and industrial exhibitions and unsusceptible of being catalogued even in the all-embracing "index collection" of Dr. Watts' department. The India that will be introduced to Londoners to-day will be the India of the bazaars and fields, of the jungle and the river, of the factories and plantations, and of modernised city shops; and South Kensington will not help its visitors to understand the political problems set afloat in this country by the European teaching of its modern colleges, nor the claims on the respect of scholars and thinkers which India may derive from the records of the past. Some of her great writers in the past have taken in the evolution of the human mind. It should, therefore, be the task of people who write on current affairs in England during the next few months, and whose pens will certainly be employed, by reason of the impulse given by the Indian Exhibition to all such topics, on the discussion of Indian questions, to fill up the inevitable deficiencies of a material display like that just inaugurated, and to keep the public mind alive to those interests connected with India which cannot be illustrated by draperies from Kashmir or fretted brass from Benares.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT IN BENGAL.

(Englishman.)

It has long been apparent to every one who has watched the progress of the local self-government scheme in Bengal that the people for whose benefit the measure was framed have ceased to take any interest in it. When the Act itself was passed in indifferent silence we were told to wait for the rules; the Act merely laid down general principles, to be developed by the rules framed by the Lieutenant-Governor under the powers expressly reserved to him; and it was when these rules came to be published that real interest would be aroused. We have waited. Most of the proposed rules have been published in invitation of criticism, and many have been finally approved, after criticisms had been received and considered. But all this time our contemporaries of the Anglo-Native and Vernacular Press have maintained an almost unbroken silence; and District and Local Boards and their powers have not found a place in the farrago of subjects discussed at the recent rayats' meetings. One is almost inclined to believe that the fiat has gone forth from the leaders of Bengali public opinion that the local self-government of Sir Rivers Thompson is to be Anathema Maranatha to all true lovers of their country, and that the only fitting reception for such a burlesque of the benefits designed for them by the all-wise and all good Lord Ripon would be contemptuous silence. But we cannot believe that those who claim to represent the masses of Bengal are so entirely destitute of real patriotism as this would imply; and the causes of the unmistakable want of interest in the Boards to be shortly elected are not so far to seek. The vague platitudes of the doctrinaire Radical who was lately our Viceroy, high-sounding generalities with a minimum of practical meaning, inflamed the fervid imaginations of our Native friends, and led them to expect more than it could be possible to give to any people in whom the sense of citizenship has yet to be created.

A RYOT ON POLITICAL DEMONSTRATIONS.

Indobinash Mitthree, who says he is a ryot, gives the Indian Daily News a subjective account of one of the great Bengal demonstrations—the Tarkessur ryots' meeting:—

On Sunday week this part of the Hooghly District was thronged all day with visitors from Calcutta and our near villages to see the new kind of mela organised by our Calcutta brethren, to which we, the people of Baba's place, had until lately been strangers. On this day the number of visitors was estimated at more than 10,000. The female visitors preferred Sibchothoordos's mela than this, because none of the pandas gave any homage to the Baba (Tarkessur). They thought first that some religious controversies should be taken, but when they heard only the noise of choukidar-choukidari, Atma Sarraan (Self-Government), Sil-Sava (Civil Service) they were greatly disappointed, and with disgust most of them left the place, and the remainder, who were lovers of music, remained till the last to hear the melodious tunes of Noni Gopal's concert. On the next day great agitation took amongst ourselves. "Why the mela suddenly took place in such an unauspicious day?" was with everyone's lips. No one of us (except ourselves, the educated chaps) could give a correct answer. Some ryots thought that Baba Tarkessur, who is very fond of music, might have given a dream to Baboo Noni Gopal to come up to him with his concert. Others said that he, Baba, would have given similar dream to Baboo Soorendro in order to hear his melodious speeches. Be it what it may, Sir, but one thing was among us which pained us much, and that is "who bore all these expenses of the tamasha?" Among one of us said if "Baba Tarkessur really gave such dreams, then our Mohanta Moharaj might have borne the expenses." When such doubts were solved amongst them, ryots, one question again arose, what was the real cause of holding such an expensive mela? When the question became intricate to them, they came to me (knowing that I am an educated chap), I wore black ribbon, when Soorendro Baboo went to jail and walked in the neighbourhood with Bengalee in my hand), and asked, "Ramdhoni, what was the object of the mela? Mondole was asked, but he could not give us clear answer." I laughed at the question and replied:—"You fool, what do you know of such mela, can a chasa taste brandy? This was a political gathering. We are being governed by English more than 125 years ago, still they do not trust us; they do not hear what Indian society advice, and Baboo Soorendro proposes. To remove these defects, this mela was held. But now

I must advise you to toil hard on your field, so that you may become a member of such a melā by subscribing in it." Hearing this from me, he said, "Ramdhoni, what good it would be for me if I become subscriber—should we be relieved from our zemindars?" "No, no, you fool," I said, "you will simply enable our worthy professional agitators to seek good for your country by travelling constantly from rail to rail in first and second classes at the risk of their health. Unless you all subscribe to such a purpose, how can our professional patriots do good for the country?"

OPIMUM.

(Times of India.)

The Anti-Opium Society, like the Anti-Tobacco Society, the Anti-Vaccination Society, and other little phalanxes of bores and busybodies, who have a negative mission in life, are so intensely in earnest that they decline to hear anything against their particular hobby. They try to make up in faith for their numerical insignificance. It is nothing to them that the opium duty is at the present moment indispensable to any Indian Finance Minister, that the growth and manufacture of opium give employment to nearly a million and a-half of people here, or that the abolition of the opium industry is not in the bounds of practical statesmanship. Still, as these enthusiasts continue to issue fallacious statements regarding opium, it is necessary, from time to time, to contradict them. They argue that the use of opium is destroying the Chinese nation, which will degenerate, not like "ancient Rome majestic in decay," but will succumb to the influence of this pernicious drug, whereas the enormous increase and overflow of the Chinese race is one of the most notable facts of the day. They swarm into every new settlement in the western world, as well as in the East. The Anti-Opium Society seem to have abandoned the argument that cereal famines are due to the large amount of land devoted to opium cultivation in India, but in their last publication they repeat the old story that "a cruel wrong has been persistently inflicted upon China during about a hundred years from the consequence of which that Empire suffers grievously to-day and will suffer for generations to come." So far, however, as the Chinese have been studied in English settlements and in America they are, though habitual opium-smokers, a singularly steady, healthy, and thriving set of men.

It is opium that enables the kossids attached to Native Courts to convey letters in an incredibly short space of time. To the camel breeders of Western Rajpootana it is not only their solace but their principal support. During the Rajpootana famine of 1868, when all the crops were eaten by locusts, the population streamed out into Malwa to find food in the opium districts. The umul pawnee stirrup cup is always drunk in Rajpootana before mounting a horse or a camel for a journey, and in China the merchant clears his brain with a whiff of opium before beginning a difficult bargain. The philanthropists should stop the English revenue from alcohol before they attack the Indian revenue from opium, and they should remember that it is absurd to call for the protection of the Chinese so long as every opium house in India is licensed by the police. Opium may or may not be "one of the greatest blessings to humanity which the bountiful earth produces," but were the Indian trade abolished to-morrow the Chinese would use as much opium as ever, only they would grow it themselves. At present Indian opium is heavily taxed in China simply to force the sale of the home-grown drug, and all the complaints that come from Chinese sources have their origin in the same motive.

A PLEA FOR THE INDIAN SUB.

It is better perhaps to be of humbler rank in India than that of a junior subaltern in these days of the depreciated rupee. The exchange has fallen to almost 1s. 5½d., and at that unhappy rate the meanest paid commissioned officer who has given hostages to fortune must remit to meet any educational and domestic expenses at home. The non-commissioned ranks are more fortunate. The Secretary of State for India has ordered that the Savings Bank balances at credit of warrant officers of the Indian Army, deposited by them prior to the 1st April, 1884, may, subject to the prescribed limit of 3,000 rupees, be remitted to England at the exchange of 2s. 0½d. the rupee. This is one of the last remaining relics of the generosity of old "John Kumparú Báhádúr," who, if we recollect rightly, extended the privilege to his Governors-General, allowing in their case the remittances to be at the exchange of 2s. 6d. But that privilege in the highest has long ceased to exist, and a Viceroy to-day suffers from the fall in silver equally with the subaltern. There is, however, some difference in their respective salaries, and if the Secretary of State for India could only see his way to allow the poor subaltern to remit home at an exchange even of 1s. 9d. the rupee, it would be "a boon and a blessing" to many. Of course there would be amiable doctrinaires in England who would indignantly ask if such privilege were granted, whether the loss was to fall upon the "impoverished ryot of India" who, according to the knowledge possessed by the majority of home philanthropists who make a study of Indian questions, is the real taxpayer and supporter of the British Empire in the East. But if the Secretary of State would only make the experiment, he would find that the much-thought-of ryot would think nothing at all about the matter. He would remain in as blissful ignorance of the effect of the measure upon the finances of India as he is now of the efforts of the philanthropists upon his behalf. The British taxpayer, whose hereditary privilege it is to groan but bear burdens, would hardly feel that such a concession was the last straw which weighed him to the ground. He, too, might not understand how it would affect him. But the subaltern bread-winner, bearing the toils and burdens of many a weary day of sunshine and sorrow in the trying plains of India, would understand how it would effect him. Political economists and financial experts may speak and write that the depreciation of the rupee is an illusory matter, to be explained by differences of value between exports and imports, which show that India as a producing country is no loser. All that the poor subaltern knows is that the rupee does not produce what it used to do. The cost of food, of wages, of necessities of life, has risen, and when money has to be sent to England for the mem-sahib or the baba-logue, the vanishing power of silver is exemplified in a most unmistakable manner. If allowed to remit home a limited amount for family purposes at such a rate as we suggest, the loss would be little to the country, and the boon would be a great one to the subalterns.—Broad Arrow.

THE MAHARAJAH DHULEEP SINGH.

(Pioneer.)

Maharajah Dhuleep Singh will, no doubt, think the Pioneer, on his way home doff his puggaree and resume the costume of civilisation where he cast it off—half-way between the ports of Aden and Sucoz. "Good morning" will again replace "Salaam" in his matutinal salutations; and with one or two such trifling exceptions the world's course will wag as heretofore. The Maharajah will have learned a salutary lesson that an indulgent British Government is not necessarily a weak one; and will also find, adding the losses by the sale of his property at Elveden to the expenses of travel and an Asiatic outfit, that a trip to Aden and back can be a very costly holiday. His finances were confused before; they will be an arithmetical Chinese puzzle when he gets back.

(Statesman.)

There is only one wise way of dealing with Dhuleep Singh, and that is to close his mouth for ever, by giving him the private property that he claims. A wise Foreign Secretary would counsel the Government to have the account made up, and after ascertaining what was really due to him—pay it and have done with him. But we can never make the bureaucratic civilian see this. Eaten up with a sense of his own importance, it would be a fatal loss of prestige, he thinks, to deal justly with the Prince. It is safer and better covertly to threaten him with penalties of all kinds if he does not submit to the authorities who condescend to trouble themselves about him and his affairs. And so Dhuleep Singh will be a thorn in our side for years to come, and his agitation will probably end in disaster to himself and a great public scandal.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The British Government doubtless acted with wisdom in arresting Dhuleep Singh's progress at Aden, but it is unlikely that His Highness will be kept there for long. If it be necessary to detain him somewhere, a pleasanter place than Aden must be chosen. It was a mistake, indeed, to let him get so far, unless the Government intended to send him to Ceylon to keep company with Arabi Pasha. But we have still to learn in what light Dhuleep Singh is regarded, or on what charge he is detained; if his enforced residence at Aden, as the guest of the Political Agent there, amounts to detention. Possibly he will be allowed to return to England with a curtailed allowance; and if the persons who are really responsible for his voyage out can be made to suffer, this would be the most satisfactory conclusion. Dhuleep Singh has never been credited with any ability of his own; and the single enterprise of his life was no doubt planned by men who hoped to make money out of it.

THORNTON'S GAZETTEER.

Some thirty years ago, moved by a happy inspiration, Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., the well-known Indian publishers, instructed the editor of their Indian Mail to cut out all the redundant matter in Thornton's "History of the British Empire in India," so as to reduce the contents of the six octavo volumes constituting the original, or Library, edition into one portly volume, adapted for the purposes of students preparing for public examinations. It was an easy task, because the historian of the old East India Company had deemed it incumbent upon him to enter into lengthened explanations and justifications of their policy and of the conduct of their public servants whenever either could be impugned by ill-natured critics. These well-meant apologies often degenerated into mere special pleading, and, in any case, interfered with the progress of the narrative, and diverted the attention of the reader from the unbiased consideration of important events. The story, was left untouched in the abridgment, and, actually, for twelve shillings a purchaser of the condenser edition possesses the same means of storing his mind with historical information as the owner of the more stately and expensive library edition in six volumes, which still costs £2 8s.

In a similar spirit the same firm have lately entrusted to Sir Roper Lethbridge and Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, the accomplished translator of the Anwar-i-Suhaili, the task of gathering into one good-sized volume the essential contents of the four demy octavo volumes which, for many years, served as the standard authority upon Indian topography. It was an admirable compilation, but had become somewhat antiquated, while it was seriously threatened by the publication of that stupendous work, the Imperial Gazetteer of India. To compete with such a gigantic enterprise, carried on under the direct patronage of the Government, and in full command of official resources of all kinds, was clearly impossible. Fortunately for Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., it does not suit every man's purse to visit Corinth or, what comes to the same thing, to become the proud owner of that colossal work, a very suitable present for a prisoner sentenced to confinement for the remainder of his days. Thornton's Gazetteer, as now offered to the public, may be procured for one guinea instead of the £2 16s. demanded for the library edition, so that it comes within the range of very humble means. A vast number of places have been added which were not dreamt of in the days of Mr. Edward Thornton, and sufficient is told about each for the purposes of ordinary reference. A good deal of the old matter has, of course, been excised, or materially abridged, but without detriment to the true value of the work. The figures of area and population have been taken from the census reports of 1881, the latest information obtainable at the India Office. On other points the editors handsomely acknowledge their obligations to Dr. W. W. Hunter and his able collaborators, too many of whom have been passed over with stint praise by their "mighty chief," who would fain exclaim with Coriolanus, "Alone, I did it, boy!" The spelling has been unavoidably adapted to the new official system, ridiculous and unscientific as it is acknowledged to be by genuine Indian scholars. The old names, however, are added within brackets in all cases to which an historic interest or a familiar association is attached. A formidable list of railway stations is given at the end by way of supplement, and serves to remind us how far we have drifted from the good old times when Mr. Thornton toiled in peace and comfort in the ugly building in Leadenhall-street, over the portico of which stood Britannia with her right hand resting on the rim of her shield and grasping a spear in her left hand—a mistake originally discovered by lovers of good cheer issuing from the Ship and Turtle Tavern over the way, still famous for its turtle soup, and old wines.—Madras Mail.

BENGAL.

HIS HIGHNESS THE NAWAB BAHADUR OF MOORSHEDEABAD has made a donation of Rs. 5,000 to the Zoological Gardens of Calcutta.

MISS PRIYATAMA DUTT, a Bengalee Christian, has just passed the B.A. Examination of the Calcutta University. The young lady was recently married to Mr. Lall Behari Bose, M.A., Assistant Professor in the Canning College, Lucknow.

THE approaching retirement of Sir Rivers Thompson, Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, has set some of our native contemporaries speculating as to who will be his successor. The Indian Echo, in a frothy article headed "The Coming Griffin," believes it will be the Governor-General's Agent in Central India, and takes the opportunity of rating him in unmeasured terms. The paper says that Mr. Bernard, the Chief Commissioner of Burma, might receive a right national welcome from the people of Bengal.

MADRAS.

THE Madras Government has recommended the bestowal of the Grand Cross of the Star of India upon the Prince of Arcot.

TWENTY Burmese life-convicts arrived at Madras by the steamer Asia from Rangoon. The men were landed and conveyed to the local Penitentiary.

BOMBAY.

FEVER, small-pox, and cattle-disease prevail in nine districts of the Bombay Presidency.

GENERAL GILLESPIE, C.B., who was lately deputed by the Commander-in-Chief at Bombay to inspect the 5th Bombay Light Infantry at Mhow previous to their embarkation for Burma, made some remarks with regard to the manner in which the men were shod, and which the experience at the late Camp of Exercise at Delhi should have taught those in authority to attempt to remedy. The General declared, says the Englishman, that, supposing the men were "sent in that state to join his command in the field, he would leave them at the base, because they could never march over rough country with such gingerbread boots as they then had, and that it would have been much better if the regiment had spent less money on the fine puggarees which he had just seen, and had made a larger investment in shoe leather."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

THE Lahore paper says that several Medical Officers in the Punjab have been refused leave to England, so many doctors being on service in Burma.

THE "INDIAN SILVER ASSOCIATION."

The following is the prospectus issued by the Simla Branch of the new Association:—

President: The Hon. Mr. Justice Cunningham; Executive Committee: G. W. Allen, Esq., C.I.E.; D. M. Barbour, Esq., Lieut.-Colonel Filgate, R.E.; Colonel W. S. Trevor, V.C., R.E.; Guilford L. Molesworth, Esq., J. Walker, Esq., J. Westland, Esq. Secretary: J. F. Finlay, Esq.

Bi-metallism, or the double standard of France, maintained, until its abandonment in 1874, a fixed relative value between gold and silver during the present century.

A departure from this standard has, by altering the standard of value previously existing, injured credit, depressed trade, caused widespread economic disturbance, and stimulated those socialistic reactions which threaten Europe with revolution.

The remedy is simple—it lies in a return to the double standard; but international agreement is necessary to effect this return.

America, France, and other European nations, having suffered acutely, are eager to join England in an International Monetary Union, which would at once restore a fixed relative value between silver and gold; but England, whose statesmen and economists are only now beginning to study the subject, holds back, and is the sole obstacle to the application of the remedy.

Public opinion has been prejudiced by several popular fallacies; these fallacies are principally,— 1st.—That bi-metallism is so abstruse a subject that it is useless for ordinary individuals to attempt to master its principles.

2nd.—That bi-metallism is opposed to the laws of political economy; and therefore cannot be maintained.

3rd.—That the fall in exchange is due to over-production of silver, and is therefore without remedy.

4th.—That England owes her prosperity to her gold standard, for which there exists a species of unreasoning fetish worship.

It is the object of the "Indian Silver Association" to promote an intelligent discussion of these questions; to dispel popular fallacies; to enlighten public opinion; and to bring it to bear upon the application of the only true remedy.

The formation of an "Indian Silver Association" will strengthen the hands of those who are dealing with the question in Europe and America.

The Indian Planter's Gazette pays a graceful tribute in Memoriam of Mr. C. A. Shillingford, one of the last of the old indigo-planters:—

"For forty-five years an indigo-planter in this district, he ranked among the few—alas! now how few—of the old band of planters who settled—in the literal sense of that word—in Purneah. He assisted at putting up the first steam-engine employed in indigo manufacture in 1842, and joined the newly-raised Local Volunteer Corps that got together during the troubles of '57. He was appointed an Honorary Magistrate and Justice of the Peace in 1864, a post which he continued to fill with every satisfaction to Government, until the last. An ardent shikari, he loved to gather the youngsters at his factory and initiate them into the mysteries of sport, and many an anecdote could he relate of the good old days when game was plentiful. His memory will be cherished by all who knew him, and by those most who knew him best. Heavy is the grief that has fallen on those who lived in friendship with him, his kind disposition and his genial qualities were so blended in him that great as is the public loss in his death, it is little compared to the blank that death must leave in his large and sorrowing family.

"Another blithe voice missing from our mirth,
One more bright soul to our gay meetings lost,
One springing seed of life the less on earth,
Nipt by what seems to us untimely frost.

"Still our small band grows smaller, still there show Fewer old faces, another vacant space
With shadows filled, our table seems to grow
A place of memories vanishing in space.

"It seems but yesterday that he was here,
The busiest in the business of the hour;
With ready judgment, kind words, vision clear,
Men gladly bowed to his superior power.

"The clasp of his kind hand still seems to cling
To mine, his kind voice still rings in mine ear,
Even while this poor memorial wreath I fling
With friendship's hand on his untimely bier."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

At a moment when the attention of every one, who possesses the least enlightenment or patriotic feeling, must be engrossed by the preparations deliberately made for the disruption of the British Empire by the man who, as the head of the Queen's Government, lies under a special obligation to preserve the integrity of that glorious heritage, the "Political prospect" deservedly claims the closest attention. And it is satisfactory to find in the present number of the "National" that it is envisaged from the "Liberal" as well as from the Conservative side. Your truest Liberal is a Conservative, your truest Conservative a Liberal. The best gardener prunes least, though he prunes where it is absolutely necessary; it is the bungler who makes excisions which are needless, and which are harmful to the healthy growth of the plant, because they are needless.

Mr. Doyle strikes us as being a Liberal of the true kind; he would "cut tack" without sawing off the bough; or, to drop metaphor, he would put right what may be amiss, without making, at haphazard, radical changes.

"If any man," he says, "thinks that a great Empire can afford to begin the payment of blackmail, that it can reward crime in one country, and continue to repress it in others, that it can betray its loyal allies and yet retain the confidence of other nations . . . if anyone believes that it is honourable, or even safe, to win a moment's ease by bequeathing civil war to posterity," such an one is past praying for. Nor do his views materially differ from those of his Conservative co-contributor, Mr. Courthope. The latter quotes, very appositely, the Iron Duke's sentiments, too many of which experience has verified, on the subject of the first Reform Bill. "My opinion is that those who wish to preserve the society called the British Empire ought to omit no opportunity of awakening the public to the danger of the measures now under discussion." And he also cites a phrase which may fairly be taken as prophetic of the fate of the Irish landlords under a Parnellite legislature. "We shall be destroyed, one after the other, by due course of law."

Nothing but sheer want of common sense could have brought things to their present pass. Hoc Ithacus vellet: and everyone is blindly to obey his behests. A "Revival of common sense," such as Mr. Austin's article, the last in the present number, gives us reason to believe to be in progress, is indeed devoutly to be wished for. Never was the fulfilment of the prayer which is prefixed to the article, "O, ye Gods, give me, not fulness of knowledge, but fulness of understanding," more needed in high quarters. An American story tells us that, on the occasion of the funeral of a distinguished "citizen," the minister begged Heaven that the deceased's son and heir might be but half as good a man as his father. "The request," it was added, "seemed so reasonable that it might have been supposed that God would have granted it: but He didn't." And we fear we shall equally be without an answer to our prayer for common sense in high quarters. But attics may remain unoccupied, while lower apartments are well tenanted; and though the highest talents may be prostituted,

As, in this bad world below

Noblest things find vilest using, let us hope to find love of country, political honesty, and common sense, prevailing in less exalted regions. We agree with Mr. Austin that "nonsense has been in the ascendant in England certainly the last quarter of a century." During all that period it might have been truly said, Chatter is King; wisdom is not, prudence is not, Chatter is. It is, however, a long lane which has no turning, and we seem at length to be approaching one.

We had occasion, some time since, to refer to the proposed route to China and Japan, if not to India, vid the Canadian Pacific Railway. The matter is one of much greater importance than at first sight seems to be the case; and we are glad to see it noticed at length by Mr. Shelford in a carefully written paper.

Lord Fortescue contributes a thoughtful Essay on what is called "Free Education": the destruction, that is (it amounts to that) of all religious education; for, if gratuitous non-religious teaching could be obtained at the cost of the State, it is highly improbable that the majority of poor children would ever enter a school where payment would, of necessity, be exacted. The writer (entirely, as it seems to us), disposes of the allegation that the poor have an inherent right to gratuitous education by the following neat quotation from Lord Derby:—"I cannot admit any right on the part of the individual to have his children taught at the public expense. The wearing of clothes is compulsory, but the State does not undertake to provide clothes."

Mr. Willert's notice of Théodore Agrippa D'Aubigné—a French historian of the highest merit, yet whose History has been omitted from the last Edition of his collected works—will interest those—and not those alone—who are familiar with the times of Henry IV. of France. Mr. Willert seems to justify Henry's "conversion" to the Romish creed, and speaks of weighty reasons.

* "The National Review." June, 1886. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

It has always seemed to us that the weightiest reason was Henry's own, "there was no cannon like the canon of the Mass," and it was on this, rather than on any other, that he undoubtedly acted.

This is an excellent number of the Review, and one on which want of space alone forbids our commenting more in detail.

HAZELL'S ANNUAL CYCLOPEDIA.*

"Hazell's Annual Cyclopædia for 1886" maintains the high standard of excellence which has characterised former editions. It would be difficult to conceive a more compact, intelligent, and intelligible vade mecum on almost every branch of information, and, what is no less important, it is accurate. The price, too, is such that it is within the reach of all who, to quote the motto of the work, wish to say "avaunt perplexity."

EL MAGHREB.†

This work takes the general reader into a new land. Man-kind in general knows Europe, Asia, and America; but, with the exception of its southern portion, not Africa. That curious mixture of Gallicism and Orientalism, yclept Algeria, is, indeed, a sort of fashionable sanatorium, hereafter to be superseded by some other, as doctors, who sometimes insist on a tonic, and, a few days afterwards, on an antiphlogistic, regimen, may take it into their heads to direct. But, though Morocco is in Africa—we may say in the Orient—yet it is not of the Orient, Oriental. In no country with which we are acquainted will the traveller find, within five days' steam of England, a state of existence so wholly foreign to his own. It can hardly be better described than in the language of an American, who observed that his sensations on landing in Tangier made him feel as though he had been "taken up by the scruff of the neck, and set down in the Old Testament."

In favour of the inhabitants of the country much cannot be said. They are barbarous, dirty, and quarrelsome. As Leo wrote some three centuries since: "Abounding exceedingly with choler, they speak alwaies with an angrie and loud voice: neither shall you walk in any of their streetes in the day time, but you shall see two or three of them by the eares." No Musulmans are more bigoted, not even those of Bokhara or Samarcand; and, as to what the French call "revendication" of conquests made many centuries ago, no Chinese could be more punctilious. It is not a little interesting, for instance, to read of one of our author's hosts, that he was "a direct descendant of Boabdil" el Chico. "His uncle still keeps the keys of the gate in the Alhambra, by which that monarch sallied forth to meet Ferdinand at the final conquest and surrender of Granada, and which the latter granted him at his special request. It is said," adds Mr. Stutfield, "that several other Moors in Tetuan still retain the keys of their ancestors' houses, and the title-deeds to their estates in Granada—that earthly paradise to which, every Friday, they devoutly pray they may one day be restored."

The name Moor was, to our ancestors, and to our Continental neighbours, synonymous with Black. "Blackamoor" (black as a Moor), contracted into Blackmore, is to this day no uncommon name, one borne, indeed, by one of the first of our modern novelists, nor will any traveller have forgotten Struwelpeter, with his "Kohlpechhabenschwartz Mohr," to mimic whom is the delight of the unsophisticated village youth of the Teuton Fatherland. Yet it would seem that the dark skin is by no means universal. Though the word Mauri signified, in later Greek, "blacks," yet "many of the modern Berbers are particularly fair. . . Now and again one sees regular 'Sandies' among the Moors, with hair as carrot and complexion as ruddy as the veriest Highlander: the Moors call these Zaar, or fair men, and give them a bad character for lying and deceit." Our author, disputing, on this point, the opinions of many travellers, attributes this to the admixture of Vandal blood, a theory which has at least the merit of being plausible, and which is supported by the undoubted fact, that "the fair-haired Berber tribes are confined to the districts near those which the Vandals occupied."

The languages spoken by the various tribes are described (p. 117) as being merely dialects of the same tongue. It is probably Semitic: it certainly contains many Arabic words, and the Arabic character is used in writing it; but we are told that "an Arab is totally at sea with either" of the dialects most commonly spoken.

The religion of the Berber race, as distinguished from the bigoted Moors, seems to be a curious jumble of beliefs—if the word may be used—borrowed from various sources. Their Muhammedanism "is, as a rule, little more than a veneer, and their faith is still tinged with Christian ideas and traditional beliefs derived from ancient pagan religions, which the new creed never entirely rooted out." Some use Sunday, not Friday, as the day of prayer, others call the months by Christian names, the name of Mary (who in these cases seems to occupy the place of Lucina) "is invoked by women in certain circumstances, and they often give pagan names to their children, which the Arabs never do." It is curious, too, to find the same custom—that succession goes through the female line—prevailing here, as in Travancore and Cochin.

The Jews, who are very numerous, are still, everywhere except at Casablanca and Tangier, locked up at night in their own quarter, or "mellah," though, thanks to British intervention, invoked by the late excellent Sir Moses Montefiore, they are better treated than of yore. Some have so far yielded to a wish to better themselves as to become quasi-Musulmans; but their Muhammedanism, too, is veneer in character. One, being asked if he was Christian, Jew, or Musulman, replied, "Sometimes one, sometimes the other; a leetle of both, 'alf and 'alf."

As regards the country itself, which "God made a garden, and man a wilderness," its climate is described as temperate and pleasant, while no language would be exaggerated in expressing the capabilities which, were it under a fairly decent Government, it would develop. Every one knows that, under the later Roman Emperors, Northern Africa had to a great degree superseded Sicily as the granary of Rome. (Not to say, that, besides producing the "panem," which allayed the hunger of the Roman citizens, it also furnished, in the shape of lions, leopards, and other creatures feræ naturæ, the "circenses" in which their somewhat bloodthirsty nature delighted.) It is, too, matter of history how often—as is well brought out in Kingsley's admirable "Hypatia"—the fate of an Emperor, even of a dynasty, at Rome, hung on the arrival, or non-arrival, of the grain-ships from Mauretania and Alexandria, in time to replenish the Imperial granaries, to which every Roman looked as the source whence he had an innate right to derive his daily bread. The country could now supply half Europe with grain: "vegetables might be grown here" (the author is speaking but of one province, El Gharb) "in sufficient abundance to supply Covent garden. . . The soil is of immense depth. . . Only one crop is produced a year, but with good irrigation works it might well bear two. A traveller of wide experience in the country, Colonel Scott, speaks of it as the richest land in the world."

Space forbids our following Mr. Stutfield (who seems to have unearthed an antiquarian El Dorado in Mequinez) in his very interesting peregrinations. No student of Islam could wish for a better opportunity than is afforded by a visit to Morocco to behold "the genuine article unadulterated."

Our traveller is justly severe on the system of "Protection," by which the Representatives of great powers "act as attorneys, as it were, for persons sending in their little bills against the Moors" (p. 208), and which, in direct breach of the provisions of the Convention regulating such matters, is carried to such an extent that "the operation of the system is practically unlimited, and that the Sultan complained—but in vain—that he could not carry on the Government, while numbers of his subjects can, under the ægis of 'protection' by a foreign State, set the laws at naught. It is an abuse the more scandalous because protections are all but openly sold." The enforcement, too, of the demand for gratuitous supplies, known as Mona (p. 229), is another objectionable practice on the part of foreign Envoys. It is gratifying to be assured that our Legation, under Sir John Hay, stood pre-eminently high as being free from reproach both as to "protection" and "Mona."

Mr. Stutfield has selected for the scene of his explorations an exceedingly interesting and undeservedly neglected country, and has narrated his adventures in a pleasant way, alike free from egotism and from would-be "smart" writing. The book is that of a well-read gentleman, and well deserves the wide circulation which it will doubtless obtain.

THE DISCONTENT OF IRELAND.†

The object of this book is succinctly stated, in the first few words. "To examine the question of Ireland's discontent, and to endeavour, by the light of history and other reliable authorities, to frame a judgment as to the remedies to be applied."

In pursuance of his object, Mr. Conder very wisely begins by insisting on the idiosyncrasies of the Celtic character. The Celt is "not as other men are." The lamentable series of events which have prevented his land from being, as it ought to be and might be, one of the bright spots on the earth's surface, is, in fact, in great part due to his own peculiarities. No one would, at the present time, defend, still less would anyone dream of repeating, the too often barbarous treatment which the Irish population have suffered at the hands of its Saxon conquerors. But rough times need rough measures; the conduct pursued towards the native Irish population will—taken century by century—bear very favourable comparison (a point on which Mr. Conder might well have insisted) with that pursued towards any other conquered race in Europe; and, lastly, it must not be forgotten that a rigid, not unduly stern, but, above all things equable, rule, has been shown by all experience to be the one thing needful for the prosperity of the Celtic race.

This latter fact Mr. Conder has well brought out in a resumé of Irish history, which occupies his first chapter: and, indeed, throughout the book; the Celtic character being well depicted at pp. 212-3. To live, from sheer idleness, in a state of filth analogous to that of the swine; to do nothing for yourself; but to expect everything to be done for you; to regard this as a natural state of things, to resent its discontinuance,* without showing a sign of gratitude for aid received; such is the character of the people with whom we have to deal if we approach the Celtic race.

Many things have in Ireland contributed to intensify, and to bring into an evil prominence, the worst part of the ever insatiable, ever revengful, character of the Celt, to whom revenge is not less dear, than is vendetta to the Corsican or Sicilian. Among the chief of these things is undoubtedly the difference of religion between the conquerors and the conquered; a point on which the priests—often but little better educated than their flock—are never tired of dwelling; nor has the abolition of the Church of Ireland in any way modified their rancour. Another is the fact that, as no less an authority than Mr. Trench informs us (p. 99), our arrangements, however well devised for the permanent welfare of the people, are odious to them. "The English method . . . does not fall in with the genius and habits of the people."

Yet between 1849 and 1869 a surprising progress had been effected by a steady encouragement, on the part of the landlords, of the better-disposed among their tenantry—aided, it must be avowed, by a lavish expenditure of money on permanent improvements—in ameliorating the condition of the agricultural classes, in increasing the size of the holdings (p. 108), and in improving the quality of the husbandry.

The most casual reader of the daily journals knows how, through the operation of the Nationalist Land League, all nascent prosperity has been destroyed; and how landlords have, by the persistent preaching of withholding of rent, been reduced to a position such that, so far from spending in the country the money which, whether resident or absentee, they spent with no niggard hand, many cannot avoid receiving parish relief. We have, however, nowhere seen this set forth more conclusively than in our author's concluding chapters, which well merit attentive perusal.

The calamities which, in spite of every effort on the part of this country, seem to cling parasitically to the Celtic portion of Ireland, find a striking contrast in the unbroken prosperity of the (naturally not more highly favoured) Province of Ulster, mainly inhabited by a population of Teutonic descent. It is by such contrasts or comparisons, carried out on Bentham's well-known "bifurcate-exhaustive" principle, that we best reach an ultimate result. Ulster, as compared with the other provinces, shows (see, among other passages, pp. 80-1) an all but incomparable prosperity. What is the cause? It is not the soil, which is not sufficiently different to account for the phenomenon. It is not—at least by no means only—the small tenures, as Mr. Conder's very interesting comparison (pp. 117-21) between Ireland and Belgium, in both which countries—the latter having a very poor soil—small holdings largely obtain. There remain religion—no insignificant factor—and population, to which latter Emile de Laveleye chiefly attributes the evil. If the above result has been fairly arrived at, it is the recrudescence of the worst qualities of the Celt with which we have to deal. We have above seen that equanimity, combined with firmness, once more, firmness, yet again, firmness, is the rule by which, according to all historical experience, this worthy should be treated: and we think that no one who reads this valuable book, which deserves to be attentively perused by all, will differ from us in opinion.

A LIFE'S TROUBLE.†

This little book is a pleasantly written narrative of the life of Ethel Ord, a young lady who, returning from school, finds herself somewhat incomprisé at home, and, being blessed—or cursed—

* "No year in its history has more clearly exemplified the peculiar characteristics of the Celtic population than the year 1848. The famine had passed away; and thousands of acres awaited only the hand of the husbandman; but the labourer was wanting." In March, 1848, thus wrote Captain Kennedy, Inspector of the Kilrush Union:—"All who received relief last year, 45,000 out of 82,000, expect its continuance. The great difficulty and danger here is in relieving a people who are not disposed to help themselves."

with a warm temper, resents her sister's want of sympathy. She is induced by the parish Parson, a hard, exacting, and unsympathetic man, to become a District Visitor, an occupation which suits her well enough. Jupiter is said originally to have made people in pairs, and then, when one day angry, to have severed them; whence it comes, says the tradition, that people pass their lives in looking for the other half needful to complete the couple, and so often go astray in their search.

Ethel, however, soon met her other half; whether she was united to him or not we have no intention to disclose. They were engaged: the Parson swore that young Leslie was an Atheist, and that Ethel must give up him, or the district-visiting. The various species of "trouble" undergone by the poor girl, and the way in which each insensibly acts as a corrective of some fault in Ethel's, on the whole, amiable, character, are artistically worked out by no 'prentice hand; and even a sober reviewer is inclined to fall in love with Ethel ere the book is half read.

The tale is, as we have said, pleasantly and even skilfully told. We have forgotten whether young ladies ever read a book a second time: if they do, they will doubtless select the volume before us for the experiment.

THE OPIUM QUESTION.

It was not likely that the debate raised by Sir Joseph Pease's motion in the House of Commons to abolish the Indian opium revenue would pass unnoticed by the Press, English and Native, in that country. But our contemporaries have felt that in giving attention to the subject again they are only bringing out old arguments which have not only stood the tests of hostile criticism, but have long ago convinced all reasonable people who were open to conviction. They know that to produce these arguments again is simply to thrice slay the slain, but, so far as Sir Joseph and his followers are concerned, they are also aware that all arguments are useless. These gentlemen have made up their minds to a certain conclusion, and it may be allowed to them, if it is a virtue, that they have the courage of their foolish opinions and stick to them. King Solomon has laid down two methods of dealing with foolish persons, either to answer them according to their folly or not to answer them at all. To reason with the anti-opium agitators has proved to be of no avail. Facts and figures have been quoted to them to explain the true position of the Government of India with regard to the revenue derived from the drug, but they have only been ignored or answered by hysterical shriekings against the awful wickedness of Christian rulers demoralising heathen millions. The people of England have been told over and over again by these agitators that the use of opium is rapidly destroying the Chinese, and that "a cruel wrong has been persistently inflicted upon China during about a hundred years, from the consequence of which that Empire suffers grievously to-day, and will suffer for generations to come." This asserted evil is being wrought, say the agitators, by the wickedness of the Indian Government in forcing opium upon an unwilling people. The facts that China produced and used opium long before the trade with India commenced, and that at the present time the production there is more than double of the entire import from India, go for nothing in the sentimental argument. So do other facts, such as that opium is taxed in India heavily, just as spirits are taxed in England heavily, and that if the fiscal impost was removed the importation of opium (only of an inferior quality) would be greater than ever. It has been in vain that such men as Sir Richard Temple, and others practically acquainted with all the ins-and-outs of the question, have assured the Anti-Opium Society that to abandon the tax would be to injure the treasury, leaving no check upon the consumption of the drug but rather giving encouragement thereto. Nor has the fact that the Opium Department of India gives remunerative employment to about a million and a-half of Native cultivators any weight with the "over-righteous" friends of China. Sir Joseph Pease, however, has not yet suggested a way to meet the deficiency of seven millions of revenue, which the abandonment of the Government monopoly would cause in the finances of India. If he and those who side with him will carry their arguments to their legitimate conclusion—that conclusion must be in favour of a total collapse of our administrative system in India for the benefit of a sentimental hobby. All arguments against the opium monopoly must be met by this simple fact, even if all the others which go to support the Government policy were abandoned.

But there is a writer in India who, with large experience and knowledge of his subject, has come forward with other arguments which, it is to be feared, will greatly shock the feelings of the Anti-Opium Society and its converts. Dr. J. W. Moore has sent a letter to the Times of India which the demands upon our space will not allow us to produce at length, but which it would be well for Sir Joseph Pease to read, study, and inwardly digest. The Doctor not only defends the Government monopoly, but defends the consumption of opium itself—in moderation:—

No one denies that excess in the use of opium is deleterious, and so is excess of whisky, or of champagne, or of roast goose, or of boiled turkey, or, in fact, of anything which may be received in any manner into the human system. Too much milk given to a baby makes it sick, and too much turtle soup, swallowed by an alderman, makes him bilious or something worse. But as with turtle soup, or milk, or turkey, or goose, or champagne, or whisky, so with opium, they are all very good things in moderation.

In moderation it brightens the intellect and soothes and composes the system. An opium-smoker never debases himself by quarrelling with his friend; he does not become in turns jovial, sentimental, maudlin, quarrelsome and then dead drunk; he does not go out and break lamps, or jump on his wife like the votary of alcohol; he does not appear next morning before the magistrate, and his debasement is infinitely less.

But Dr. Moore claims for it many less negative virtues than these. It gives "endurance, increases the capability of sustaining life and strength where great physical efforts are required, it relieves all manner of pains, and has a prophylactic over malarious influences," and in summing up all its praises the Doctor tenders this opinion to the Anti-Opium Society:—

I am quite sure there are many other things which should be stopped before the growth and use of opium is interfered with, and would advise the "Anti-Opium Society to turn their attention to such things when they might effect some benefit, and not what they are now effecting, actual harm. They would deprive numbers of people in India of their livelihood; they would take away a source of enjoyment and a protection from disease from the poor; they would interfere with the will of the Chinese nation, which declares it shall have opium, and reduce the Chinese to the use of inferior and more deleterious home-grown opium instead of the superior produce of India; and they would make the British taxpayer pay the cost of the loss of Indian revenue consequent on decrease of opium sales. And all this because there are some who abuse one of the greatest blessings to humanity which the bountiful earth produces.

But we are afraid that Sir Joseph and his brethren of the Anti-Opium League will consider that the above is only another instance of the shocking depravity of Anglo-Indian human nature in dealing with this question.

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.

We are enabled, through the courtesy of Mr. Griggs, of the Journal of Indian Art, to give, to-day, a plan of the Indian Section of the Exhibition, which may assist our readers in following such notices as we intend to give of the various exhibits of Indian arts and industries in the several Courts to which we think special attention might be drawn.

The arrangements of the Conference Committee, of which the Duke of Manchester is chairman, are now fairly complete, and the following meetings are announced for dates previous to Whitsuntide. In some cases it will be seen that the Conferences are under the care of independent Societies and Associations, in others the arrangements have been made direct by the Conference Committee. The meetings are open to all visitors to the Exhibition:—

Monday, May 31.—P. L. Simmonds, Paper on "Our Colonial Wool Supplies," at 4 p.m.

Tuesday, June 1.—Conference of the Anthropological Institute, at 4 p.m., on "Native Races in British Possessions in Africa." F. W. Pennefather, Lecture on "A Tour Through New Zealand," (with limelight illustrations), at 8.30 p.m.

Wednesday, June 2.—S. B. L. Druce, Paper on "Importation of Grain and Bread Stuffs from the Colonies and India," at 4 p.m.

Thursday, June 3.—Arnold White, Paper on "South Africa as a Field for the Emigration of the Industrial Classes," at 4 p.m.

Tuesday, June 8.—Conference of the National Association for Promoting State-Directed Colonisation, at 2 p.m. Alexander Begg, Lecture on "The Canadian North-West," at 8.30 p.m.

Wednesday, June 9.—L. J. Shand, Paper on "British-Grown Teas," at 4 p.m.

Thursday, June 10.—Vincent Robinson, Paper on "Indian Carpets," at 4 p.m. F. W. Pennefather, Lecture on "The Industries of New Zealand," at 8.30 p.m.

Friday, June 11.—Conference of the Royal Colonial Institute. Paper by F. Young, on "Emigration to the Colonies," at 3 p.m.

The Papers will be followed by discussion. There will be no discussion after the Lectures. Further information as to the arrangements can be obtained by applying to the offices of the Reception Committee in the Exhibition.

Few exhibits at Kensington afford greater attraction than those in the Educational Department (Indian Court—not far from Messrs. Ward's jungle scene). They consist of models of Native Schools, selection of school books, and specimens of writing, drawing, &c., by pupils in Government Schools. In most cases the school is held in the verandah where the children are seated on the floor, not divided into classes as with us, but each native child learning by himself, shouting out his task at the top of his voice, thereby making a confused din. Their first lessons in writing are made in the sand, after which they advance a stage to the use of the palm leaf; the third course being small black handboard "copybooks," on which they inscribe with white ink. Another attractive exhibit, illustrative of Christian enterprise, is that of school books and other general literature for women and children shown by the Christian Vernacular Education Society for India, of which the Society have circulated no fewer than twelve million copies of 1,157 different works printed in eighteen languages. Their popularity and usefulness is shown by their being adopted by over thirty Missionary Societies, last year's sales reaching about £5,000. The need of educational and popular literature is now greater than ever, India's children being almost limitless and constantly increasing; it is pleasing to learn the Government are zealously striving to bring them all under instruction. Lord Northbrook, a few days ago, in presiding at the anniversary meeting of the Christian Vernacular Education Society, expressed his approval of the Society's efforts to provide the people of India with healthy literature. The report of the General Council on Education in India last year stated that "the native literature India possessed was defiled with impurity. Even in its sacred books, containing passages of rare beauty and excellence, there was much that was immoral and impure, whilst most of the profane literature was too vile for description." Those visiting the Exhibition may thus witness what is being done through this Society to raise the moral, social, and spiritual condition of our Indian brotherhood. We are glad to hear that next year the Society purpose publishing a "Jubilee Life of the Queen" in all the principal Indian languages. The work, which will contain a well-executed coloured portrait of Her Majesty, will doubtless help to bind the Eastern and Western peoples in greater sympathy towards each other. If any of our readers are desirous of taking an active interest in the Society's labours they may correspond with the Honorary Secretary. The Society's Offices are 7, Adam-street, Adelphi, London.

CAPTAIN G. H. POWELL, 2nd Battalion South Wales Borderers having been granted six months' leave on medical certificate, Major W. Heaton and Captains Logan and Roche will carry on the Paymaster's duties, Captain Logan performing them on the responsibility of the Committee.

The Commander-in-Chief has ordered the transfer from the 1st Battalions of at least twenty old soldiers, picked men, of good character and thoroughly reliable, to each company of the 2nd Battalions of Goorkhas now being raised—to form a nucleus of order and discipline in each company.

CUTTING THE WRONG DEPARTMENT.—It appears that the Government of India is of opinion that the Medical Department offers a field to which the financial shears may be applied, and communications have accordingly been made to the different local Governments with that object. The Government of India admits that the increased number of British troops may necessitate some increase in the personnel of the department, but hopes that the system of station hospitals may reduce this increase to a minimum. The establishment of these hospitals, and the conservancy establishments especially, are to be thoroughly scrutinised with the view to ascertain whether any reductions can be made, or, at all events, whether it may not be possible to prevent any increase in such establishments owing to the increase in the number of British troops. Medical officers throughout the department are to economise expenditure in every possible way likely to result in reduction in establishments or supplies. It is also pointed out that considerable savings may be effected by the prevention of waste of all kinds and not unnecessarily accumulating stores, supplies, equipments, or instruments, which may become obsolete or superfluous. The different Surgeon-Generals have been called upon to submit their opinions as to the economies practicable without loss of efficiency through the Controller of Military Accounts to the different local Government:.

CAPTAIN J. E. MEIN, 5th Punjab Infantry, has been appointed Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry, and posted to the Meerut Circle.

The Madras Mail concludes a review of Major Sedgwick's book as follows:—Major Sedgwick's remedy for an insecure position in India is an heroic one. When we conquered the Punjab we sold the Musalman Province of Cashmere to its Sikh Governor as the price of his treachery to the cause of his own ruler and nation. Major Sedgwick wants us to undo the transaction by buying back Cashmere, and giving the Maharajah its equivalent in territory in the Punjab. Any sacrifice would, he thinks, repay us, could we get the vale of Cashmere into our own hands. We should locate there an army corps and make it a bulwark and advanced post on our North-Eastern Frontier—for its occupation in force would threaten the flank of any invader attempting to cross the Indus. Among other precautions Major Sedgwick would mass British troops in a few central positions, instead of having them scattered as at present throughout the country, an idea which has often before been broached. He suggests, however, no satisfactory method for discovering and dealing with the disguised Russian agents and spies, whom, he believes, are even now sedulously at work in Native States, and among the ranks of the Native troops.

INDIA COUNCIL REMITTANCES.—Tenders were invited for 15 lacs of bills upon India and telegraphic transfers on Wednesday last, but no allotment was made. A few applications were reported to have been sent in at 1s. 5½d. per rupee, but they were not accepted. The Eastern exchanges showed no marked improvement, being, in fact, lower than they were on the previous Wednesday, and after the experience of the previous week it was not expected that the India Council would draw. Since the announcement of the non-allotment the Indian exchanges have slightly rallied, but telegraphic transfers are still no better than 1s. 5-16d. per rupee. This week 15 lacs will again be offered for tender. From April 1st to May 18th inclusive the Council had granted remittances for Rs. 1,32,76,000, realising £987,105. To the corresponding date last year Rs. 1,40,83,200, realising £1,114,193, had been disposed of.—Statist.

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Ceremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D., M.R.A.S.]

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary of the Church Missionary Society, Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Muhammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary World.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr. Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopædia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammadan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . . We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Mussalman faith, the information being in every case taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars. . . . This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Homeward Mail.

A GAZETTEER

OF THE

OF THE

VICEROY OF INDIA.

BY

EDWARD THORNTON.

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR ROGER LETHBRIDGE, C.I.E.
(Formerly Press Commissioner in India, &c.),

AND

ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E.,

H.M. INDIAN (HOME) SERVICE.

(Translator of the Anvár-i-Suhail, &amp;c.)

WHEN Thornton's "Gazetteer of India" was originally presented to the public, it was the only compilation of its kind, and it was obviously desirable that, within reasonable limits, the work should be sufficiently comprehensive to give the reader some insight into the history of the various localities enumerated. Since that date, however, Hunter's "Imperial Gazetteer" has been prepared, which is not only much more ample than its predecessor, but is still to be greatly enlarged in the New Edition now in course of production. In these circumstances it has been thought incumbent, when issuing a New Edition of Thornton's "Gazetteer" corrected up to date, to modify in some measure the plan of the work by omitting much of the retail, and giving only such leading facts and figures as will suffice for ordinary purposes of reference, a plan which has the additional advantage of reducing the work to one moderate-sized volume.

It is obvious that the value of the New Edition must depend in a large measure upon the care and judgment which have been exercised in the preparation of the letter-press. The task was, in the first instance, undertaken by Sir Roger Lethbridge, whose literary attainments and acquaintance with India were considered to qualify him to a marked degree for an undertaking demanding considerable knowledge and experience. In order, further, to render the work as complete and perfect as is possible, the Publishers deemed it prudent to subject the pages to the scrutiny of a second Editor, in the person of Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, whose lengthened experience gives to his criticism an unusual degree of weight and importance. The joint names which appear on the title-page will, it is hoped, serve as a guarantee to the public that the "Gazetteer" is in the main accurate and trustworthy, free alike from sins of omission and commission. It will be found to contain many hundreds of place not included in any former edition, while the areas and populations have been revised by the data given in the Census Report of 1881.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb,
and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals
throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHES,
COLDS,
ASTHMA,
BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Test is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freebairn was deliberately untrue, and he agreed to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From Stevens & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera, Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALEPTATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. Is 1jd., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, St. Russell St., W.C.

invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him five will never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a 'medicino-even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 8, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 21st May; from Calcutta, Allahabad and Madras to the 19th May.

GENERAL PRENDERGAST's despatches on the late Burmese War contains the names of a large number of officers whose services he is desirous of bringing to the attention of Government.

THE Governor-General in Council has passed a very eulogistic resolution on them.

THE Viceroy places on record his cordial recognition of the admirable manner in which General Prendergast and the troops under him carried out the task set before them.

THANKS are given among others to Brigadiers-General Norman, White and Foord, commanding Infantry Brigades, and Captain Woodward, commanding the Naval Brigade.

THE question of the permanent location of the Government offices at Simla is to be considered by the Finance Committee in its economical aspect.

RUMOURS which have gained currency in the Vernacular Press that the Viceroy has written home asking for authority to adopt sterner measures in connection with Native political agitation, are without foundation.

It is believed that the Finance Committee is almost certain to recommend the abolition of the Military Works Department.

THE case of Colonel Hooper having been duly reported on by the Commander-in-Chief, in connection with the report of the Court of Inquiry, is now before the Government of India for orders.

RAJA SIR DINKAR RAO, K.C.S.I., is writing an article for the October number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review, discussing the changes which have taken place in the characteristics of India since the days when he played a leading part in politics, and giving reminiscences of events in which he personally played a part.

It is stated that the estimate of the out-turn of opium in the Benares Agency in the current season has undergone a material change. In the place of 74,000 maunds estimated at the end of March last, it is expected that hardly 60,000 maunds will be realised.

MR. PAUL, who goes with Mr. Macaulay to Tibet, is now in Calcutta superintending the necessary preparations. Mr. Macaulay is expected by the next steamer; and the Mission, it is believed, will be ready to start from Silligori in little more than a fortnight.

THE Gazette of India notifies the appointment of Mr. W. E. Ward, M.A., of the Bengal Civil Service, Chief Commissioner of Assam, to be Judicial Commissioner of British Burma, in succession to Mr. Jardine, now Judge of the Bombay High Court.

THE extensive godowns belonging to Messrs. Ralli Bros. at Harda have been destroyed by fire, the origin of which is not known. About Rs. 50,000 in silver were saved, but all the books were destroyed.

THE Calcutta Municipal loan of 17½ lakhs was allotted in one sum. It is understood that the Bank of Bengal has taken a large portion.

Notes of the Week.

THE appointment of Colonel G. T. Chesney, R.E., C.S.I., to the Council of the Governor-General of India, in succession to the late Major-General Hughes, has given general satisfaction, and the question may now be allowed to drop as to the reasons why the honour was not given before. There are puzzles in patronage which may be guessed at only.

THE Times correspondent at Calcutta continues to telegraph to that journal his own views, or the echoes of the Bengal Club, as the public opinion of India. It is now pretended by him that the disorderly state of Upper Burma is mainly owing to Sir C. Bernard not being a strong enough ruler. It is forgotten or ignored that he had to perform a most difficult task with very inadequate means. To carry out the pacification of a country about two-thirds the size of France, with no roads, and overrun by hordes of armed robbers, with a handful of troops and some very weak police, has been the work allotted to him. The Native Press praise where the Times correspondent blames.

THE British public know little, and, perhaps, care less about the Kachyen Tsanbwa, but it is satisfactory to know, by telegram from Rangoon, that he has apologised, and that "his apologies were accepted." He declares that when his people made a raid upon an unoffending village they did so "accidentally" during his absence. He has, therefore, sent presents to the British Expeditionary Force, which has returned to Bhamo.

It is also satisfactory to learn by wire that Her Majesty's birthday was celebrated with mutual harmony by the English and Russian officers employed on the Afghan Frontier Commission, Sir J. Ridgway entertaining both Commissions, and the Russian Commissioner proposing the Queen's health. Such courtesy was only to be expected, even if, as probable, our Afghan allies failed to comprehend the cordiality between the representatives of the nations which they hate and distrust equally.

THE following telegram, which the Times gives this morning under date Rangoon, June 7, is likely to occasion considerable comment:—

THE Rangoon Gazette of to-day states that the Government of India is about to grant a concession to work the ruby mines in Upper Burma to a powerful French company, with a sprinkling only of English wealthy names for official use; and states that, by means of this concession, France is likely again to obtain a firm standing in Upper Burma, and to enjoy large territorial rights. The proposed concession will comprise all the privileges formerly enjoyed by the lessees from the Burmese Government, including the right to collect taxes in a district of more than fifty square miles in extent.

It is difficult to credit the above statement, but according to the telegram the journal which gives it goes into considerable details, and states that the Government of India has acted in opposition to the recommendations of Sir Charles Bernard and of the local Government.

Discussing the financial question, the Gazette states that although the company promises to pay treble the rent formerly received by the Burmese Government, the result probably will be that, instead of the public revenue being benefited, it will be found necessary to incur an expenditure for military purposes to maintain order among the miners, largely excising the rent to be received from the company; for it is urged that the proposed concession will probably cause an insurrection among the hardy mountaineers who inhabit the district where the ruby mines are situated, and who will not tamely submit to be deprived of privileges which they regard as their birthright. The mines have from time immemorial been worked by the peasantry of the district, and the Rangoon Gazette states that it is only by depriving the Burmese peasantry of their rights that the company can pay the rent which it offers.

UNTIL the above is confirmed or explained the story must be accepted with caution, especially as it is asserted that no Government Agent has ever seen or inspected the mines in question. The Government of India is not in the habit of granting concessions so readily.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 6.

Recent legislation regarding land in Assam has given rise to an agitation which is rapidly spreading and is attaining considerable proportions. The measure in question, which is styled the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation of 1886, and which has for its object the consolidation and codification of the laws relating to the ownership of land in that province, appears to be disliked by the planters no less than by the ryots. It is difficult to understand what are the exact objections to the measure, which professes to do no more than enact in legal form rights and customs which have long been recognised and acted upon by the Courts. So far, however, as can be gathered from the resolutions adopted by various meetings, it would seem that the following are the principal grievances alleged:—First, that the regulation was passed in the form of an ordinance by the Executive Government, thereby depriving the public of any opportunity of discussion and criticism which would have been afforded had it been introduced as a Bill in the Legislative Council; secondly, that it excludes from its operation civil stations and military cantonments and concentrates all real authority in the hands of the Chief Commissioner, that it confers plenary powers on revenue officers and restricts the jurisdiction of the civil courts; thirdly—and this appears to be the main grievance—that it prohibits transfer by sale, gift, or otherwise of land held under annual leases. The last and most largely attended meeting on this subject was held at Jorehaut on Thursday. It is said to have attracted over 10,000 people, who after strongly condemning the obnoxious regulations, proceeded to consider general political questions and passed a series of resolutions affirming the necessity of the re-organisation of the Legislative Councils, the repeal of the Arms Act, and retrenchment of expenditure, and expressing sympathy with the national conferences which met in Calcutta and Bombay some months ago.

A terrible and fatal accident occurred at Lahore High School some nights ago. Shortly after midnight the roof of the boys' dormitory fell in suddenly, and crushed three boys. Two when extricated were found to be dead; the third died shortly after. Five others sleeping in the same room escaped with slight injuries. The roof was flat, and was supported by five heavy transverse beams bedded in two feet of bricks and earth. The middle beam snapped short off almost in the centre, and in falling brought with it smaller rafters, wood, ceiling, and mud roof to the weight of several tons. The dormitory was built only three years ago. The Executive Engineer of Lahore has made a report, in which he attributes the breaking of the beam to the knots in the wood. He adds that the wood was of a quality not suitable to the use to which it was put, and the beams were too far apart.

It is stated that the Bengal Chamber of Commerce has followed up the address of its president, a summary of which I telegraphed last week, by forwarding to the Government a strongly-worded protest against the removal of the public offices from Calcutta to Simla. Several Anglo-Indian and Native papers have taken up the subject, and express unqualified approval of Mr. Cruickshank's attack on Simla.

Scindia is again very unwell, and by the advice of astrologers has left Gwalior on a pilgrimage to Bithoor. Although in a weak state he bore the journey well, and was no worse on arrival at Bithoor. Holkar also is reported to be seriously ill.

The Calcutta Englishman publishes the following account of the recent rebellion in Manipur. Immediately on the Maharajah's death Bara Chowba Yaskub Lakpa, son of Noursing Maharajah, rebelled, and encamped on May 21 at the Boori Bazaar, where was collected a large body of men. A force of 500 men was promptly despatched against the rebels, who fought bravely all night; but on the following day General Tangal, with a strong force, appeared on the scene, and drove the rebels to the hills. The leader, with about 200 followers, escaped in the direction of Cachar. The country is now quiet.

The Maharajah of Cashmere has expressed a desire for the extension of railway communication to his territories. The Indian Government have deputed Lieutenant-Colonel De Bourbel, R.E., to survey several routes into the valley.

SIMLA, JUNE 5.

Dr. Hunter has delivered a lecture here upon the fall of the Mogul Empire, pointing out that Akbar based his rule in Hindustan upon a policy of conciliation towards the Natives, whereas his successor Aurungzebe by reversing that policy destroyed the Empire founded by his ancestors. The fact that the Commander-in-Chief, Sir F. Roberts, occupied the chair at this lecture, and that Dr. Hunter's audience included most of the members of the Government, is interpreted here as an indication of the future Native policy of the Indian Government.

BOMBAY, JUNE 5.

The rainy season has set in.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 5.

The Bank of Bengal has increased its minimum rate of interest and discount from 6 to 7 per cent.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 6.

According to the latest news from Cabul the Ameer is in good general health, although his gout is still troublesome. The box containing the Queen's letter investing him with the Grand Cross of the Star of India had reached Cabul. The Ameer announced the contents of the letter in a durbar, and ordered it to be suspended at Kotwali for the people to read.

THE AFGHAN FRONTIER COMMISSION.

MESHED, MAY 30.

The British and Russian Commissions are encamped on the locality recognised as the boundary between the Bosagha district of Bokhara and the Khamiab district of Khoja Saleh on the Oxus. The thermometer marks 100 deg. by day. The nights are still cool.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 5.

An outbreak occurred to-day in Bassein Gaol among the prisoners awaiting trial for rebellion. It was promptly suppressed, but four prisoners were shot during the disturbance.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 6.

The condition of the united Provinces continues far from satisfactory. Public opinion in India is all but unanimous in pointing to Sir Charles Bernard as the person primarily responsible, and, as far as I can gather, the same opinion is held in Burma. No one denies Sir Charles Bernard's ability, energy, or honesty of purpose, but it is felt that he has shown himself altogether deficient in the qualities required for organising the new province, and has failed to strike the proper key of the situation. What is wanted is not additional troops, but a strong man thoroughly in sympathy with the people—such a man as the late Sir Arthur Phayre, or as was Mr. Nicholson in the Punjab. It is beginning to be whispered, too, that General White is not the right man in the right place. If things go on as at present the pacification will be a very tedious and serious business, while under a strong common-sense and elastic Government the country would be in order in a few months. District officers would be carefully selected, and then trusted fully and supported heartily, and there would no longer be any need for punitive expeditions, which largely punish innocent villagers, and not the dacoits.

Lower Burma is in a hardly less unsatisfactory condition. This fact is mainly due to the disorganised state of the police. A little more weakness may do infinite mischief, for the Burmese are a romantic people, and only the proof of British power will keep them quiet.

CENTRAL ASIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 6.

Letters from Colonel Lockhart's mission, dated May 9, have reached India. The party were then near Gumbaz, on the northern slopes of the Hindu Koosh. They had gone northward from Gilgit through Hunza, and would work along the Hindu Koosh and enter Kafiristan from the north.

MERY, JUNE 4.

The latest intelligence from the Afghan Boundary Commission states that the Russian members reached Andkhol on the 18th ult., and pitched their camp three versts from the town. Two days afterwards they visited the town. On the 22nd the Russian officers were present at a parade in honour of Queen Victoria's birthday. In the evening there was a tent-pegging contest in the British camp, followed by a dinner, at which the Russian Commissioner proposed the health of Queen Victoria, and the British Commissioner that of the Emperor of Russia.

The Khan paid a visit to the Russian Commissioner. Colonel Kuhlberg, on returning the visit, was received with great distinction, a salute from the citadel being fired in his honour. On the 24th the British Commission left for Hadsamtale, whither the Russian members were to follow a day or two later. During the day the thermometer registered 104° Fahrenheit in the shade. No rain had fallen for a fortnight.

ADEN, JUNE 4.

The Maharajah Dhuleep Singh left for Europe yesterday evening.

THE ORIENTAL BANK ESTATES COMPANY, LIMITED.—The failure of the old Oriental Bank was a calamity in many ways to Anglo-Indians and others interested in Eastern securities. These persons will notice with satisfaction that a company (the prospectus of which we give elsewhere) has been started under the title of "THE ORIENTAL BANK ESTATES COMPANY, LIMITED," for the purpose of acquiring any assets of the Oriental Bank now in liquidation, and working these to a profit. This will be beneficial to those interested in the old bank, and to intending shareholders in the new venture. It is proposed to take over at first the estates in Ceylon and Mauritius, which are of great and increasing value, acquiring others as may be deemed expedient. The Directorate is composed of gentlemen well known in India, whose names are a guarantee for the soundness and high character of the undertaking.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

THE INDO-COLONIAL EXHIBITION.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The opening of the Indo-Colonial Exhibition by Her Majesty will excite no great enthusiasm in this country—for the reason that we are a selfish and self-contained people; taking small interest in arts and manufactures, or in any thing beyond the groove of our everyday duties. Nor can we expect the public at home to be more than superficially moved by the display of carved screens, copper-ware and raw products—be these arranged never so tastefully and written of never so profoundly. For a year, or it may be two years, Indian trifles will command a larger sale than they did before; exactly as Japanese curios came into the market with the appearance of the Japanese Village in London. Our brothers at home have their own interests to see to; their own absorbing political conflicts to watch. They will accept, placidly and unresponsively, as is the wont of the Great British Public, the latest novelty provided for their entertainment. They will stroll from Court to Court, and from Province to Province, with the fine indiscriminating indifference which is invaluable at exhibitions; and, despite elaborate skeleton maps, and the clearest of labels, will depart with hopelessly tangled notions on all matters, men, and wares Indian. The Pioneer can hardly imagine an Englishman going through the Exhibition without coming away inspired with a sense of the vastness and importance of India—an importance which ought, to his mind, to “dwarf the petty wrangling of Parliamentary politics.” The notion is a pretty one; but it is sad to think that a fire-engine, hurrying towards Knightsbridge, or a cab-horse on his knees in the Brompton-road, is, to the average Englishman, a subject of livelier interest and discussion than an exhibition full of unintelligible wonders. He understands and knows about the engine and the cab horse, having seen both many times; and, it may be, having been run over by one or the other. These things have a personal interest for him which “gods and brass-ware” (under this comprehensive heading does he group all Indian manufactures) do not possess. The exhibits, he will say, are quaint—very curious indeed. He must get some little Indian things for his drawing-room. Everybody will get “little Indian things” for their drawing-rooms. Several gentlemen will lecture on “India and the East.” He will attend several lectures, because India is the fashion; and he desires, moreover, to pronounce those queer names correctly. Several more gentlemen will write about “India and the East.” He will read their writings first with zeal, later with impatience, and lastly with despair. He will return, eventually, laden with “Indian things,” to the fire-engine and the cab-horse, the police court and the stump-orator—to “old Gladstone” and “Joey.” Thus the tide will ebb, leaving a residuum of bad Benares brass-work and Birmingham Swami jewellery on the mantelpieces of his home and the necks of his women-folk. The police court and the stump-orator only are eternal. They have survived the interest of many exhibitions.

THE FALL OF SILVER AND INDIAN MANUFACTURES.

(Englishman.)

The serious and continued decline in the price of silver, and the consequent fall in exchange between India and England, which have taken place during the past ten years, have acted as a decided stimulus to the manufacture of yarns and cloth in this country, and promise, if they be still further continued, to place India amongst the principal cloth-exporting countries of the world. Twelve to fifteen years ago, when exchange was from 20 to 30 per cent. higher than at present, India, or rather Bombay, where most of the cotton-weaving mills are situated, was hardly able to produce even the coarsest descriptions of cloth at a price to enable her to compete with Lancashire. But when exchange began to fall a decided change was immediately visible. It is easy to illustrate what took place. Take the case of an order for cloth received from a Delhi merchant, which would cost if imported from Lancashire, say Rs. 200 when exchange was at 1s. 8d. per rupee. Suppose that the same kind of cloth is manufactured in Bombay, and would there cost Rs. 205. With exchange at 1s. 8d., the Lancashire cloth would then be the cheaper of the two and the Delhi merchant would therefore send his order to England to be executed. But on the other hand, suppose the rate of exchange to have fallen to 1s. 6d. The English cloth which formerly cost Rs. 200 could not now be brought out for less than Rs. 222, whereas the same cloth in Bombay would still cost only Rs. 205. The intending purchaser would doubtless buy the cheaper cloth, and would send his order to Bombay, continuing to do so as long as exchange was depressed.

The piece goods bazaars at Delhi, Agra, and Cawnpore all tell the same tale. During little more than a year there has been a great increase in the supply of cloths of Bombay and Cawnpore make in all these large markets. In Delhi and Cawnpore especially, Indian-made cloths are now on sale in the various bazaar shops, which, for strength and durability, compare most favourably with the same class of goods imported from Lancashire. The Bombay cloths are, of course, inferior to the English in colour; they are less free from traces of cotton seed; but they are made of durable, coarse yarns, and are in other respects very suitable for the markets in which they are selling. Dealers in Delhi and Cawnpore say that these Bombay goods are liked by consumers; that there is always a steady demand for them, that they are comparatively cheap, and that, in short, the Bombay mills are in a fair way to offer a successful competition to the enterprise of Lancashire. This new phase of the cotton industry is attracting considerable attention among the Bombay and Calcutta merchants. As yet, owing in a very great measure to the poor quality of the cotton grown in this country, India can only produce coarse yarns and coarse cheap cloths. But there is no reason why in time a better coloured, long-stapled cotton should not be grown, and with better selection and more care in cultivation it is believed that this could be readily accomplished. If the finer and longer grades of cotton can ultimately be produced in India, and if exchange continues at the present low level, there is some reason to believe that the Bombay, Madras, and Cawnpore weaving mills will one day be able to distance Lancashire in the competition for the supply of fine as well as coarse cloths.

The Indian mills are not only becoming serious competitors to Lancashire in the Indian trade, they are also rapidly gaining a considerable proportion of the export trade to countries in which silver is the standard of currency. The Japan or China merchant buys his cloth or yarn either in India or in England, and his choice between these two producing countries is almost entirely regulated by the question of price. A fall in the sterling value of silver, and the consequent decline in the English value of the rupee and of the China dollar, while it does not materially affect the cost of an Indian article in China, very considerably increases the cost of English goods in that country. For 100 dollars the China merchant can command a certain quantity of cloth either in India or in England. If a decline of two per cent. in exchange occurs, he finds that he now has to give 102 dollars for the same quantity of cloth if bought from England, while its cost if purchased in Bombay or in Calcutta is unchanged. He accordingly places his order in the cheaper market, and what India gains Lancashire loses. The heavy decline in silver and in exchange which has taken place during the last few years has thus acted as a decided stimulus to the export of Indian-made goods to countries using a silver standard currency; while at the same time it has helped to restrict the exports of gold standard England to all these countries. In fact, the great increase in the exports of cloth and yarn from India to China and Japan is almost without a parallel in the history of commerce. Although there was a falling of in 1884-85, the exports are still more than double what they were seven years ago, and there is every reason to believe that they will go on steadily increasing. The recent heavy fall in exchange has, therefore, acted in favour of India as against English manufactures, and has been of the greatest possible assistance to the weaving and spinning mills in India, enabling them to compete with Lancashire not only in the Indian markets, but also in the large and growing markets of China, Japan, and Rangoon. This is a phase of the silver question which must not be overlooked.

THE GOVERNMENT AT SIMLA.

(Pioneer Correspondent.)

We hear a good deal now of the faulty form of administration in India, and the necessity of Parliament ruling and controlling more directly the destinies of the country; but do the agitators, who thus cry out against our benevolent-despotism-tempered-by-telegraph, really appreciate the situation? They would have every illiterate Radical, who is privileged to write “M.P.” after his name, meddle and muddle in Indian affairs, regardless of consequences, just because his mischievous interference would harass the Executive and frighten here and there some official more timid than his fellows. The direct outcome, it is admitted, would not benefit India, but then “the Government would be wheeled into line,” and that would be something gained! It is nothing to the agitator class that political parties now change at home with almost kaleidoscopic quickness; that the Minister of to-day may be the Opposition leader of to-morrow; and that the struggle for place and preferment leaves men no time for the study of real statesmanship. It is sufficient that this or that politician may be made the agent by which the Government of India can be worried and bullied, and their every action discredited. Those remarks are called forth, not by reason of any special effort now being made by Indian agitators to force the hand of Government, but because of the stagnation to all business between the India Office and the authorities in this country, due to the Irish crisis at home. For weeks past it has been found almost impossible to induce anyone in the India Office to attend to any Indian affairs at all; from the Secretary of State downward nobody is thinking of aught but the Irish question; and, of course, “Indian business can wait.” And it certainly has to wait, as the Viceroy and his Councillors know to their cost. Luckily the machinery of Government here does not as yet draw its sole motive power from Westminster, and much can be done.

even though every despatch and telegram sent from Simla to London is pigeonholed in the most summary way. But the Government of India are greatly handicapped by the absolute indifference shown to their suggestions and recommendations on various subjects, and they may well long for an end being put to the political crisis at home. "Old politicians," we know, "totter on in business to the last;" but there would seem to be a chance now of one older than his fellows tottering to his final fall. Meanwhile the Viceroy and his advisers can only go quietly on their way, recommending and advising action on the thousand and one subjects which they have to deal with, from the pacification of Burma and the settlement of the Chinese frontier question on the one hand, to frontier defences and the delimitation of Northern Afghanistan on the other; arranging a mission to Tibet one day and settling Kashmir affairs another; inquiring into the military administration of India one week and into the railway question the next; trying to find a solution of some urgent difficulty in a Native State, say Bhopal and Indore, and then having to devote their whole thoughts to some troublesome person such as Dhulip Singh; forwarding despatches by one mail on the Statutory Civil Service, and by another on the question of Legislative Councils for the North-West Provinces and the Punjab—dealing, in short, with references, reports, and returns day after day, and taking action upon them in addition, although they know the Secretary of State will shelve almost everything sent to him at a time when party strife is at its height in England. And yet our infuriated Indian fellow-subjects, or those who claim to represent them, would make India the prey and sport of Parliament instead of looking to the Executive in this country and strengthening its hands by loyally helping it against its enemies at home.

This protest is not so irrelevant as may at first sight seem. We are now at the beginning of the Summer Session of Government in the Hills—the "pic-nic," as it is termed by those who denounce the exodus from the plains; and there have been the usual accusations levelled against all high officials wasting their time and playing at ruling India from the Himalayas. We are assured that "absolutely nothing is done at Simla," that a sort of interregnum takes place from March to November, and that India is really ruled only when the offices re-open in Calcutta. These fictions have been exposed so often that they need scarcely be again torn to shreds; there is good solid work done here as elsewhere; and if the fruit which it should bear is not immediately apparent, the fault lies, not in alleged apathy of the Government of India, but in the wilful obstructiveness and indifference of the India Office in London. The office may bestir itself when an incident such as Dhulip Singh's voyage brings a stern remonstrance from Simla, or when an atrocities' cry is raised about Burma, but the many important general political questions which affect the welfare of India are totally disregarded or forgotten when an Irish Land Bill is to the fore. The moral of all this disquisition is that I cannot tell you much of political importance at this season—everything is "hung up"—though it is an open secret that the Burma question occupies the greater portion of the Executive Council's time, and that the constant requisition for fresh troops is no small cause of anxiety. The outlook is not a pleasant one; for the whole system of administration in Lower Burma seems to be crumbling to pieces, while rebellion is still far from crushed in the new province. There is sadly wanting a strong hand to set the country in order; but then India no longer possesses men of the school that pacified the Punjab; so the strong hand will be wanting until some marked disruption occurs, and then—perhaps we shall learn why 23,000 troops are required to hold the country. How good of Russia, by the way, to refrain from raising another scare this spring when we have Burma on our hands!

The Finance Committee are working quietly and unobtrusively here; the Secretaries of the various departments can vouch for the thoroughness with which the inquiry into the various establishments is being made. So far a mass of materials has been collected which the members of the Committee are sifting and examining in a highly laborious way. They themselves cannot yet see what specific recommendations will be made—it is too early in the day—so outside speculation as to the outcome of the inquiry must be misleading. Probably no man in India is so fitted for obtaining the maximum of work from his coadjutors as Mr. Charles Elliott; he is not only a hard worker himself, but the cause of hard work in others; and there is great hope, therefore, that the Committee will really effect some practical good. By the time the rains set in good progress will have been made into the working of the Imperial "Spending Departments," and then members may be delegated to the Presidencies and Provinces to further examine into local expenditure. It is a strange state of things as regards Indian finances that the rise of one penny in the value of the rupee would put a crore of rupees to the credit side of our accounts, while probably all that the Finance Committee can effect in the way of retrenchment will not total much more than this.

NATIVE PAPERS ON DHULIP SINGH.

The detention of Maharajah Dhulip Singh at Aden forms the subject of leading articles in the vernacular papers of the Punjab. Without a single exception, the action of Government is condemned. The Panjabi Akhbar of Lahore writes as follows:—

"The treatment accorded by the Government of India and the Secretary of State to the son of the Lion of the Punjab is not at all approved by public opinion. We don't mean to ask why the Government does not allow the Maharajah to visit the Punjab or India. Government is, of course, at liberty to act in such manner as it may deem proper; but it is anything but wise to first allow the Maharajah to come to India, and then detain him at Aden after he had sold his property and left for this country. The protest of the Maharajah against leaving the ship, and predicting a State trial as the result of his detention, was perfectly natural. It was after considerable correspondence, and a very full discussion, that the Maharajah was allowed to sell his property in order to settle in the Punjab. It was then decided that the Maharajah should not visit the Punjab, but remain at Ootacamund. Perhaps the Maharajah also agreed to this arrangement, and departed from England. If the Maharajah was not to be allowed to come to this country, why was he not previously told?"

After stating that the Maharajah made a mistake in taking the Pahul before his arrival at Aden the writer remarks:—

"On the whole, the policy of Government in this connection is calculated to break the heart of the Khalsa, which is a pillar of strength to the British Government; not because their old ruler has been kept away from them, but because the Government has not shown any reliance on their loyalty."

The newly-started Imperial Paper of Lahore writes as follows on the same subject:—

"Although a good deal has already been written by the Native papers on the Maharajah, the treatment accorded to him by the Government, in compelling him to return to India in so miserable a condition, will prolong the discussion of the subject in the columns of the Vernacular papers, and make them express their sympathy with him. That the Maharajah deserves a good deal of sympathy does not admit of any doubt. The discussion of this subject is not only undertaken to express sympathy with the Maharajah, but also to prevent the Government from treating him in a manner calculated to cast a stigma on its generosity and good faith. It is a pity that the case of the Maharajah has not met with sufficient consideration. The British Parliament has paid no attention whatever to his case. The claims of the Maharajah were not imaginary, but perfectly well founded, as shown by him in his memorandum to Lord Salisbury."

After quoting some portions of the memorandum, and the reply of Lord Salisbury, as also reproducing a letter written by a Punjabi, in reply to the Maharajah's letter to his countrymen, the writer concludes as follows:—

"Nor is this all. The Maharajah has been prohibited from visiting this country at all. The telegram from Aden, that the Maharajah is a guest of the Residency at Aden, has been confirmed by another from Simla, from which it appears that the Maharajah had a stormy interview with the Secretary of State for India, who told him that he would not be allowed to travel farther east of Aden, as he had broken his engagement to live privately and unpolitically. As might have been expected after all this long and tedious discussion, the Maharajah has been sent from England to Aden as a political prisoner. The Maharajah should comfort himself with the thought that, whatever comes from a friend is for the best."

The Shafiq-i-Hind, after referring to the telegrams received regarding the detention, makes the following remarks:—

"So far as we know, the Maharajah has never taken any part in political matters. Of course, if to respectfully pray for one's rights is tantamount to living politically, the Maharajah is guilty of the charge. Beyond this the Maharajah has done nothing. Indeed, the English papers which, instead of being sympathetic, are hostile to His Highness, have preferred no such charge against him. Under these circumstances, the Native papers should be excused if they regard the Maharajah as quite innocent; as every paper must base its opinion on the knowledge which it possesses of the subject. If the Government conceal the real facts of the case from the Native public, and the Native Press find fault with its actions, the Government has to blame itself."

After giving a brief account of the policy adopted by the Indian Government in this respect, the writer proceeds:—

"We do not suggest that Government should take no precautions whatever, or that it should allow the Maharajah to visit the Punjab or India. All that we object to is, that if there was, in the opinion of Government, anything to be feared from his coming to this country, it should have discouraged from the very outset any intention on the part of Dhulip Singh to visit this country; as, in that case, the matter would not have gone so far. The first mistake which the Government committed was the indifference with which it treated the repeated prayers of the Maharajah for an addition to his allowance; and he consequently made up his mind to come to this country, where he could live much more economically. In short, the mistake made by the Government is not only a political blunder, but one which will lead common people to think that Government is afraid of Dhulip Singh, who will be regarded as a victim of British ill-treatment; and therefore deserving of sympathy. It is a pity that Lord Dufferin, who is credited with being a diplomatist and a statesman, should have committed so great a mistake."

The Serajul-Akhbar of Jhelum, the Ghamkhwar-i-Hind of Lahore, &c., are also full of articles on the same subject, and write much to the same effect as the papers quoted above.

BENGAL.

THE BENGAL CIVIL SERVICE.—It is a very bad year for the Executive officers of Bengal. The year is, says the Englishman, far advanced, and yet there are no fewer than four pucca Joint Magistrates (Messrs. Manisty, Savage, Phillips, and Lee) without Acting Magistracies. In ordinary years, not only all Joint Magistrates but even some of the Acting Joint Magistrates get such officiating appointments. Some years ago there was a talk of creating four new districts, but the matter seems to have been allowed to drop; and it is not improbable that the proposal has been pushed aside by more important business.

THE CALCUTTA POST OFFICE ROBBERY.—The details of the conclusion of this trial contain nothing of interest worth publishing; but it is curious to note that a Native special jurymen, whose name has not transpired, seems to have been suddenly seized with an unaccountable sympathy with the dishonest individual whose act has been properly punished. The juror in question, addressing Mr. Justice Norris prior to the prisoner being sentenced, is reported to have said:—"Your Lordship, as the prisoner has given no trouble to the Court, I hope you will consider something for him." His Lordship replied that he would do his best, and what he thought was right under the circumstances.

• A CARRIER PIGEON'S MESSAGE.—An extraordinary incident is reported to have occurred at the Calcutta High Court. One of the translators of the Court, on casually glancing up at one of the racks in the Court record-room, observed a carrier pigeon seated on it having a small piece of paper, rolled up in the form of a quill, dangling from its neck and tied on with a piece of silk. The pigeon was seized and the paper taken from its neck, and on examination it was found that the outline of a pigeon had been traced on the paper, and that, within the figure, an inscription in the Persian character had been written. The pigeon and its message were taken to the Chief Justice, who ordered a translation to be made of the letter, when the following words were made out:—"Moulvi Abdul Rahman, may he be victorious in the case in the High Court before Justice Romesh Chunder Mitter and others." There was no signature, and nothing to indicate either from where the bird came or who flew it.

MADRAS.

THE SOUTHERN INDIAN GOLD MINES.—Our Madras correspondent, telegraphing on the 10th, gives the following quotations of gold mine shares:—Mysore, £7 12s. 6d.; Ooregum, £1 12s. 6d.; Nundydroog, £1 17s. 6d.; Glenroch, 7s. 6d.; and Balaghat, £1 1s. 6d.

A SCIENTIFIC DISAPPOINTMENT.—Referring to Mr. Thomas's failure in Madura to obtain any evidence against Mr. Crole's administration, a Madras paper writes:—"As for that distinguished Fellow of the Zoological Society, it is hard upon him that he has been misled by what he took to be the footprints of a fine specimen of the corrupt European official. He had much better for his own sake have taken to heart, and acted upon the friendly advice that we offered him early in March, when he was on the eve of leaving Chepauk for Madura."

BOMBAY.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL P. A. CARNEGY has arrived at Secunderabad to assume command of the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force.

ENDLESS LITIGATION.—The appeal and cross-appeal in the suit Jugmohandas Munguldas v. Sir Munguldas Nathoobhoy, K.C.S.I., it appears, will not end with the Appeal Court. Sir Munguldas Nathoobhoy has applied for a certificated copy of the judgment of Sir Charles Sargent and Mr. Justice Bayley, with a view to appealing to the Privy Council.

REDUCTIONS IN THE NIZAM'S ARMY.—It is reported that the Minister of Hyderabad has completed a scheme for the reduction of the irregular troops, which will shortly be submitted to his Highness the Nizam. It is not unlikely, if the proposals are accepted, that reductions to the Minister's extent of seven or eight thousand men will be effected, involving a saving of some three or four lakhs in the military expenditure of the State.

LIEUTENANT D. H. MACPHERSON, 2nd Battalion the Seaforth Highlanders, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Commander-in-Chief, Madras.

GENERAL PRENDERGAST'S DESPATCHES.

General Sir Harry Prendergast's despatches on the late Burmese war contain the names of a very large number of officers whose services he is desirous of bringing to the favourable attention of Government. The despatches are accompanied by a highly eulogistic resolution from the Governor-General in Council. After stating his Excellency's wishes to place on record his cordial recognition of the admirable manner in which General Prendergast and the troops under him carried out the task set before them, the resolution continues:—"By the rapidity of the movement, by skilful strategy, by the exercise of humane forbearance, General Prendergast has succeeded, with comparatively little loss to the force under his command, and without unnecessary bloodshed or undue severity towards the enemy, in occupying Mandalay, in capturing its King, and taking possession of the whole of Upper Burma; for these services the warmest thanks of the Government of India are due to General Prendergast and to the officers and men, the Naval Brigade British and Native forces, the Volunteers and the Indian Marine. They are specially due to Brigadiers-General Norman, White, and Foord, commanding infantry brigades; Captain Woodward, commanding the Naval Brigade; Colonel Carey, commanding the Royal Artillery; Colonel Sanford, commanding the Royal Engineers; Commander Carpenter, R.N., Indian Marine Survey; and Captain Campbell, Senior Officer of the Indian Marine. The Governor-General also desires to record his approbation of the manner in which the various departments of the force carried out their duties during the campaign—the Medical Department, under Deputy Surgeon-General Donnelly; the Commissariat and Transport Departments, under Lieutenant-Colonel Loughton and Major Hill; the Ordnance Department, under Major Fisher, have proved the complete efficiency of those departments under circumstances of considerable difficulty. Lieutenant-Colonel Begbie, the superintendent, Army Signalling, also merits the acknowledgment of the Government of India. The Governor-General is much indebted to Rear-Admiral Sir F. Richards for the very complete and prompt manner in which his Excellency placed the whole force under his command at the disposal of the Government of India, and for the admirable manner in which the Naval Brigade was organised and equipped. The Governor-General expresses his hearty thanks to Mr. Bernard, Chief Commissioner, British Burma, to Colonel Sladen, chief political officer of the force, and other civil officers who have assisted them during the recent operations. To Mr. Bernard, his Excellency is much indebted for the valuable assistance and personal energy which has so much lightened the labour of organising the force and the flotilla which carried it to Mandalay; also to Colonel Sladen, to whose tact and knowledge of the Burmese people and their language the peaceful surrender of the King was in great measure due. The Governor-General also records his appreciation of the assistance rendered by the management of the Irrawaddy Steam Flotilla Company and the skill shown by their commanders of their vessels.

During the operations which were being conducted in Upper Burma troubles arose on the frontiers of British Burma, consequent on raids committed by the lawless soldiery and dacoits. These were very promptly suppressed by the troops of the British Burma division, who had not the good fortune to form a part of the expeditionary force. The thanks of Government are due to them for these services, and specially to Major-General Buck, commanding British Burma division, and to Mr. Symes, Secretary to the Chief Commissioner, for the very efficient measures taken by them to secure and maintain the tranquillity of the province. The labours of the troops have not yet ended, and they may still be called on to undergo privations and to perform harassing duties; but the Governor-General confidently hopes that with the aid of the civil officers the work of pacification and suppression of dacoity will soon be effected. It remains for the Governor-General to place on record his gratitude to the local Governments and the Army Department for the manner in which the expeditionary force was organised and despatched. Few expeditions have been conducted to a successful issue with such rapidity and completeness. The Governor-General desires to express his cordial appreciation of the energy displayed by the Government of Madras and the provincial Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army and the departments working under their orders, for the expeditious and efficient manner in which every detail of organisation and embarkation of the Madras force was carried out. The Government of Madras have very fully acknowledged the services of the following officers as deserving of notice, and the Governor-General wishes to add to these commendations of expression his own appreciation of their services:—Colonel Hawkes, Commissary General; Major-General Chamier, Inspector General of Ordnance; Surgeon-General Irvine, Medical Staff; Surgeon-General Furnell, Indian Medical Department; and Lieut. Taylor, Master Attendant. The Governor-General also desires to thank the Government of Bombay for their cordial response to requisitions made by the Government of India and for the rapidity with which their troops were equipped and despatched. The Governor-General takes this opportunity to thank Sir Donald Stewart, who was Commander-in-Chief in India when the expeditionary force in India was organised, for his co-operation and advice; also to General Roberts for the assistance rendered since his arrival in India. The Governor-General also acknowledges the services rendered by the Adjutant-General and Quartermaster-General in India and staff, and the departmental officers, who under their orders have carried out the various details connected with the organisation and despatch of the force. The thanks of the Government of India are due to the following officers and their subordinates for the energetic part taken by them in the equipment of the force:—Colonel Hunt, Commissary-General-in-Chief; Colonel Low, Commissary-General for Transport; Major-General Hughes, Director-General of Ordnance in India; Surgeon-General Madden, Medical Staff; Surgeon-General Simpson, Indian Medical Department; and Colonel Walton, Superintendent, Army Clothing; to Captain Hext, Director of Marine, for the promptitude and efficiency with which the transports were taken up and filled, and to Captain Carew, Deputy-Director, and Commander Street, Assistant Director.

THE Alliance Bank of Simla is one of the most prosperous of all the inland banking concerns. With a working capital of 46 lakhs, it has earned a net profit during the past year of 24½ per cent. The affairs of the Bank are managed with great care and intelligence, and a steady effort is being made to raise the reserve fund, which already amounts to more than a third of the paid-up capital. Out of twenty-three dividends declared since the Bank was established the minimum of seven per cent. was only reached on the occasion of the first two years.

ACCIDENT TO AN INDIAN STEAMER.—The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company have received the following telegram from Suez, dated June 7th, half-past two P.M.:—"At noon, the Kaisar-i-Hind, from Australia, while lying at anchor in the Suez roads, was run into by the British India steamer Merkara, which struck her port side abreast of the mizenmast, cutting in a length of three feet below the water-line. The Kaisar-i-Hind has since been brought into Port Ibrahim, and is now discharging cargo. The P. and O. Company have offered passengers the opportunity of going home in their steamers Malwa and Brindisi, leaving Suez this afternoon. There will be no interruption to the India, China, or Australian mail service."

At the invitation of the chairman and directors of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, a large party of colonists and others interested in the Colonial and Indian Exhibition visited the Royal Albert Docks on Wednesday. The visitors proceeded by special steamer from Temple Pier, and on arriving at the docks were heartily cheered by large crowds of workmen and by the crews of the vessels discharging or taking in cargo. Most of the ships in the dock were gay with bunting, and the yards of the Peninsular and Oriental vessels were manned by Lascars, who, in their white robes and red turbans, presented a very picturesque appearance. At luncheon, which was served on board three of the steamships of the company—the Rome, the Parramatta, and the Chusan—there were present, amongst others, the Duke and Duchess of Manchester, Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, M.P., Mr. Woodall, M.P., Mr. R. Bourke, Mr. Sutherland, M.P. (the chairman of the Peninsular and Oriental Company), Sir Saul Samuel, and Sir Charles Tupper. The toast of "The Queen" was most cordially received, as was also that of "The British Empire." After the luncheon the visitors inspected the three fine vessels of the company, and a large number subsequently returned to London by the special steamer Alexandra.

PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The ninety-first half-yearly meeting of the proprietors of this company was held at the company's offices, Leadenhall-street, last week, Mr. T. Sutherland, M.P., presiding. The directors regretted having to continue to report unfavourably on the state of trade, and its bearings on the company's operations. During the half-year there had been experienced a diminution of traffic affecting the freight revenue at the rate of upwards of £100,000 per annum, and the prospect of making up this deficiency during the remainder of the current year was at present wanting. The passenger receipts had not diminished, but remained stationary at the same point as last year. There had been a certain amount of transport employment obtainable, which had assisted the general revenue. The directors recommend an interim dividend at the rate of five per cent. per annum. The chairman announced that for the first time for many years the Australian Colonies had joined hands with the Government at home in devising a plan for a comprehensive mail service to Australia, for hitherto it had happened there had been a certain degree of jealousy on the part of the larger Colonies one of another, so that while Victoria had been pulling to obtain a mail service in one direction, New South Wales had been pulling with equal or perhaps greater vigour to secure a mail service in another direction. But at the present time the Colonies had joined hands to ask for tenders through the Mother Country for a comprehensive mail service, and he had every hope that the solution would be satisfactory to this company. The state of the shipping trade now was discouraging, but the company had faced a very much worse state of things than now, and still continued to pay a dividend. The report, after comment from other proprietors, was adopted.

WANDERINGS IN CHINA.*

Few persons are more competent to "personally conduct" a reader through a new and strange country than Miss Gordon Cumming; she possesses the happy knack of "chatting on paper." Things are explained, subjects of interest are pointed out, manners, customs, and ways are described in detail, while the interest is so sustained that the toil of learning is merged in a sea of pleasure. It was, therefore, with no ordinary delight that we commenced to read the two goodly volumes which contained Miss Cummings' experiences in China. Nor were we disappointed; nay, more, as page after page of charming "chit-chat" and brilliant small-talk passed in rapid succession before our eyes, we had almost dared to hope that the talented authoress had escaped the rock which wrecks so many a mariner in the waters of Chinese literature, and that for once a traveller had been found able enough and bold enough to rise superior to the cant and feebleness which encircle the Opium question; but alas! just as we were about to close the second volume with a loud hurrah, our senses were saddened and our spirits drooped within us as we waded through line upon line of the old, old story about the demoralising action of the British Government in regard to this drug. We have no intention of entering upon a wearisome discussion as to the opium trade, but we cannot refrain from telling Miss Cumming a few plain facts which she would do well to bear in mind should she be anxious to understand a question in regard to which we cannot detect that she possesses the merest glimmerings of knowledge. First of all, opium was grown in China years and years before any importations were made from India, and is now, indeed, so extensively cultivated, that were the supply from the latter Empire stopped entirely, there would not be any appreciable effect on the Chinese population, who do not as a nation consume Indian opium, the latter being so expensive, indeed, that none but the wealthy can afford to use it. The next remark we have to make is, that if instead of writing pious and well-meant sentiment Miss Cumming would study the facts of the case, she would find that Britain never had any opium wars with China; and, lastly, she would also meet with high authorities in the medical world—notably Sir George Birdwood—who join issue as to the injuriousness of the drug so far as its use is a national practice, or, as our fair authoress would have it, national vice. We have been thus careful to allude to this matter, because it is the only blot in a most charming work, and having thus relieved our consciences, we proceed to the more pleasant task of glancing at a few matters of interest in these otherwise readable volumes.

The one great characteristic of China is that it is a "land of smells." At every turn the air is vitiated with the most pestilential odours, which to an European are sickening and repulsive to the last degree. Yet Master Chinaman seems to be utterly indifferent to the insults which are hourly heaped upon his olfactory nerves, and passes life happily and merrily in the midst of an atmosphere reeking with miasma and impregnated with the vilest of all vile stenches. Nay, more, he adapts himself to the disgusting surroundings of his daily existence; at meals he throws the bones and scraps of food on the floor, and if now and again some grease be spilt in his dining room, there it remains till traffic wears it away again. His servants never sweep a room except just in the middle, while "the accumulated filth finds safe quarters in the corners and under the furniture. All through the long winter personal washing is limited to rubbing the face and neck with a flannel wrung out in hot water, but as to clothes they are never changed day or night. A succession of thick wadded garments are heaped on one above the other as the weather grows colder, and they are cast off one by one with the return of spring." Disgusting as this seems, it reads even more revolting that children should never be washed, but only rubbed over with a flannel wrung out in hot water—a mere "lick and a promise." No wonder a crowd of Celestials is too strong a dose for any but a Chinaman.

The next point which merits attention is the universal custom of infanticide which prevails—a practice about which there is no "concealment, being fully sanctioned by public opinion." It is no uncommon thing for a mother to mention that she has made away with three or four girls, and "throughout the Empire the numerical disparity of female children is always a painfully suggestive characteristic." No secrecy is used. The hapless infants are neglected as soon as they are born; and uncared for, unclothed, unfed, they pine away, and are cast by cart-loads into the first drain or ditch which happens to come in the way; sometimes, indeed, if a window chance to get out of repair a dead baby-child is put in to keep out the draught! Yet Exeter Hall says nothing about this, but runs crazy in regard to the opium question—a mere drop in the ocean of national vice as compared with the wholesale murder of hapless beings who have committed no sin beyond the unconscious crime of belonging to the female persuasion. Thus much for pious bigotry and misdirected zeal!

* "Wanderings in China." By C. F. Gordon Cumming. William Blackwood and Sons. 1886.

Underlying all the actions of the Chinese nation is a belief in Spirits, not alone as regards the next world, but also with reference to the everyday life in this mundane sphere. At every turn a good or a bad dragon is invoked as a blessing to the individual or a curse to his foes. "The whole duty of man" consists in appeasing the Spirits, and cases have been known where wealthy men have purchased the heads of their friends who had fallen in war so as to stitch them on the bodies, and thus enable the luckless heroes to enter Paradise, if not with mens sana, at any rate in corpore sano. History is silent whether this pious friend deceives the custodians in the world of Spirits. Surgery, too, is an unknown art, because no one dare appear in the next world mutilated. Patients will even eat an amputated limb so that nothing shall be lost of the body which nature has bestowed! The very homes reflect the belief in the Spirit world, for it being universally thought that sprites et hoc genus omne always travel in a straight line, innumerable devices are adopted in Chinese houses to make as many zigzags as possible, in the devout expectation that the imp of mischief, finding the impossibility of a direct flight, will abandon a task so full of difficulty, and so destructive to the head and limbs of a visitant from the land of Spirits. The amount paid annually as offerings to conciliate the manes of the dead is calculated at the astounding sum of £32,000,000 sterling!

Everything in China is peculiar. There is no post, there are no newspapers beyond the official Pekin Gazette, a venerable publication of more than 600 years' standing, machinery is almost—in places quite—unknown. The very money is uncouth; payment of an amount equivalent to sixpence involves the counting of 140 or 150 pieces of coin called "cash," while to disburse a large sum involves the use of some means of conveyance. English people play battledore with their hands, Chinese children use their feet; in Europe a dog is the faithful attendant of the wayfarer as he toils along for amusement or duty; in the land of the Celestials everyone carries about a caged singing-bird! With us the national game is cricket, with them flying kites is par excellence the amusement of a race reckoned by hundreds of millions.

We have glanced at a few points of interest in Miss Cumming's work—enough, it may be hoped, to induce others to read and judge for themselves, and we can promise them a dainty bill of fare, a good hostess, plenty of mental food, and a whiff of opium just to soothe the nerves before closing the volumes.

THE WESTERN PACIFIC AND NEW GUINEA.*

When the world, "from China to Peru" (and a good deal more, both Eastward and Westward), has been explored, it is really refreshing to light on a new region. And this, assuredly, Mr. Romilly opens up to our astonished gaze. Astonished, we say deliberately. For, though Robinson Crusoe saw at a distance—and, having no binocular, imperfectly—the consumption of humans by "humans," we think it was reserved for our traveller to be the close spectator, without becoming the victim, of a real act of Cannibalism on a large scale.

There cannot be a doubt that the Editor has done well and wisely in giving to the world a work, which, though not intended for publicity, and though considered by the author as "very deficient in the matter of giving information," will impart to most readers, as it has done to ourselves, an amount of knowledge respecting a comparatively unknown quarter of the world, which no one would expect to find in an octavo volume of a couple of hundred pages. Much of the Western Pacific has, indeed, as our author reminds us in his Introduction, "always been quite out of the track of ships." It is but little known, and the Civil Service Commissioners could hardly do better than resort to the pages of this work for names of which the Examiners, and probably the Candidates, have never heard. Guadalcanor is not known to "every schoolboy;" New Ireland has, under the new German craze for expatriating Germans to the remotest regions, become "New Mecklenburg," and Adia may safely be backed—pace Mr. Wren—to foil most of those who settle, and most of those who are settled by, examination papers.

Of the utter ignorance which prevails in England, and even in Australia, respecting an island group so little unexplored as the New Hebrides, Mr. Romilly gives (p. 10) some ludicrous instances. One may suffice. An Australian paper suggested drawing a cordon of men round one of the islands in order to drive its inhabitants into the interior. Said cordon was to consist of sixty men; the island in question being at least 400 square miles in size, and possessing a fighting population numbered by thousands. A display of ignorance equally gross, but more unpardonable in a professedly scientific body, is referred to on the same page.

The term Western Pacific, as taken conventionally, comprises "some fifteen million square miles of land and ocean," lying almost as much to the East as to the West of the Greenwich meridian. Though, however, the term be a misnomer, it has been generally accepted; and Mr. Romilly describes the vast portion of the earth's surface which it includes as being, for the better half of the year, amongst the pleasantest, as regards climate, on the face of the globe; especially calling attention (p. 89) to the unsurpassed novelties which it presents. "An amateur traveller," he says—and we commend his remarks on this head to yacht-owners—"could, in the most luxurious manner, and without a single hardship to endure, see life here as thoroughly savage as any in the world." We should think so, if, perchance, he had a chance of "assisting," in the French, or Pickwickian, sense, at a cannibal auto da fe.

It is impossible not to be pleased with the assurance (pp. 6, 144) that the narrative of his voyages by the great circumnavigator James Cook is still the best authority as regards the larger part of the region to which this work relates; the minuteness and accuracy of his observations having been marvellous. It may well be believed that the recollection of his adventurous voyages has lived in the memory of the islanders: but it is somewhat startling to read "that a gentleman, well known in the Pacific, conversed twenty years ago with a native of Tahiti, who remembered Cook's visit to that island."

The narrative of Mr. Romilly's own adventures is pleasantly and well written. He is singularly free from the credulity, the rushing at conclusions, which he reprehends in others. On this he has some very sensible and pertinent remarks at p. 5 of his Introduction.

The work, designed "not so much to give a minute account of any one island or group of islands, as, by touching shortly on the most noticeable peculiarities of different tribes," to give a general idea of the condition of the Western Pacific south of the Equator, does not present many passages of reasonable length which can, without injury to the sense, be detached from the context: but we shall not err in directing special attention to the account of a (New Britain) battle (p. 49), truly Homeric in the amount of speechifying which precedes the actual encounter; and to the hideous cannibal feast (p. 54), which succeeds, of which the traveller was the reluctant, and involuntary, but helpless, witness, and of which he would, but for his tact in having propitiated the old women of the tribe, and been the still more reluctant, and equally helpless, victim.

The chapter on "Poisoned Arrows" deserves very close attention. The subject (like hydrophobia) has always been shrouded in mystery; and the death, from a (presumably) poisoned arrow, of Commodore Goodenough, though exciting curiosity as to the character of the poison employed, never gave rise, as it would seem, to the questions: Did the Tetanus in that case, or does it usually in others, arise from poison at all? Or may it not rather be attributable to dread of the consequences of a wound, acting on a sensitive organization? A careful investigation of the evidence bearing on the subject leads the author to conclude, that whatever poison is used is comparatively innocuous, and that fatal results are due to fear, at least, as much as to poison. The question is one deserving of more consideration than (so far as we know) it has received: and may well engage the attention of medical men.

This book abounds in excellent stories, all well told, and some (for instance, that (p. 201) of the ball at Samoa, and those (Chap. XI.) respecting a worthy who rejoiced in the euphonious, and not unmerited, sobriquet of "Bully Hayes") are entertaining to a degree.

A very good map (on a necessarily small scale), illustrates the relative positions of the places spoken of. We have learnt more from this book than from many a ponderous tome: it rarely happens that a volume so unpretentious contains so much which will be absolutely new to, and cannot fail to interest, the general reader.

THE JOURNAL OF THE ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.*

The article of Sir M. Monier Williams on Buddhism in its relation to Brahmanism, which stands first in order in this Number of the J.R.A.S., will attract every one who desires information on a subject as interesting as, in its higher developments, it is recondite. No one is more competent than Sir M. Williams to instruct the reader on such a topic; and the "points"—to use a stage expression—which are made, are well made. In particular, attention should be directed to the curious parallels drawn by the author between our own religion and Buddhism. As, in Christianity, the Founder, "Himself a Jew, never required his followers to give up their Jewish creed or usages," so the founder of Buddhism, himself a Hindu, never required his adherents to make any formal renunciation of their ancestral religion (p. 130). To this our Essayist might, we think, have added another. Just as, "according to Gautama's original plan, every true Buddhist was bound (p. 133) to be a celibate monk," and taught (p. 134) "that a wise man should avoid married life as if it were a burning pit of live coals," so St. Paul (1 Cor. vii.

passim, especially ver. 36-38) distinctly discourages matrimony, as a state of life unfavourable to religious contemplation. But, with Christians as with Buddhists, the old precept, "Be fruitful and multiply," has over-riden all later rules of conduct.

The essential idea of Buddhism, which (p. 129) "postulates the eternal existence of Nothing as its starting-point, and ends in simple Nihilism," is, too, amusingly compared (p. 147) with the modern Positivist doctrine "that both mind and body are resolved into their elements at death." The whole of this thoughtful and instructive Essay deserves careful perusal: nearly all its conclusions will be new to those who have not closely looked into the matters of which it treats.

Mr. Morrison, the Bible Society's agent in South Russia, contributes a paper of much value to ethnologists, on the Geographical Distribution of the Modern Turki Languages, with an excellent Appendix by the Hon. Secretary of the Asiatic Society, Mr. R. N. Cust. One reads with less surprise that the Turki-speaking tribes are gravitating towards Russia (however regrettable this may be from a political point of view), than that "the Turki stands (p. 192) at the head of all languages in its wonderful symmetry and power of form, evolution, or accommodation."

A second paper, with glossary, on Folk Songs in the Bhojpuri dialect of the Bihari language, from the pen of Mr. G. A. Grierson, B.C.S., forms Article XII. Characteristic as are the songs quoted, the matter lies within the ken of few but professed Orientalists.

Mr. J. W. Redhouse's erudite disquisition on the simple, and well known ditty, "The Song of Meysun," and the consideration of the many ways (p. 273) in which the name is spelt, leads the writer, naturally enough, to the important question of the transliteration of Arabic, the sounds of which are, admittedly, among the most difficult to render accurately into any European tongue. We are not about to enter at length on this subject, in dealing with which Mr. Redhouse proposes to introduce an all but entirely new system; but we are quite of his opinion that the rule of thumb "all consonants as in English, all vowels as in Italian," is far too rough and ready (even were it, as far as it goes, strictly correct) to meet all the difficulties of a very perplexing matter.

Mr. Hale Wortham's praiseworthy translations of the stories of Jimutavahana, and of Harisarman, should be read, and we are glad to see an appreciative notice, by Mr. Sidney Churchill, of the recently (1871) deceased Persian littérateur, Riza Kuli Khan.

STATE-DIRECTED COLONISATION.*

Lord Brabazon has not, we think, written this little pamphlet in vain. Had he succeeded in doing nothing more, he has done much in bringing home to the middle-class reader the necessity of emigration, as the sole means of coping with the enormous increase of population in the British Islands; unless, that is, we desire our own countrywomen to resort to the vile practices by which French families are usually confined to one son, and (possibly) a daughter, and in consequence of which the population of France is diminishing rather than augmenting.

Most of the facts adduced by the writer in support of his argument on the above head, however well known to those who have studied the subject, are comparatively unfamiliar to the general reader. Many will be "surprised to hear" that, while the British Isles contain thirty-five millions of inhabitants, they comprise but seventy-seven millions of acres, including bog, marsh, and rock: a tolerably crushing refutation of the promise of "three acres" (let alone the mythic "cow") to each inhabitant. The fact, too, is well brought out, that, while "within the last ten years Great Britain has added more to its population than it did in the six hundred years that followed the Norman conquest," the island would, at the same rate of increase, "contain one hundred and fifty millions of people before the year 2,000, and . . . would present the appearance of little else than one continuous city from Land's End to the Firth of Forth." (p. 14.)

"The land of England," we are assured, "could not support more than an additional four millions of persons, were it possible to place them on the land, and this number is just about equal to the present increase of the population in ten years."

It being admitted, on such facts as these, that "something must be done," it would seem obvious that emigration on a large scale is that "something." And how to do it is the question; for private efforts, however large and generous, are, and must ever be, wholly inadequate to such an undertaking. Lord Derby, when Secretary for the Colonies, gave utterance, indeed, to the not very statesmanlike remark, that distress arising from over-population must (p. 65) be "looked on" as a sad, but unavoidable, evil, which could not be remedied, although always increasing. With characteristic inertia, he "looked on" the evil, and like the Levite of old, "passed by on the other side." Nor did his colleagues do much better.

* "State-Directed Colonisation Series. No. 1. State-Directed Colonisation: Its Necessity." By Lord Brabazon. London: Stanford (for National Society for Promoting State Directed Colonisation). 1886.

The unpractical Government of our "practical" nation soon found out, as usual, how not to do it, by sending off to the colony most willing to receive emigrants, Canada, the scum of the Irish workhouses. This the Dominion Government very wisely declined to "stand." They would take unpauperised families, and would assign to each, on nominal terms, a considerable allotment (160 acres) of land; but these families must (whether by Governmental or by private aid matters not) be provided with funds sufficient for their sustenance until the virgin soil should have time (say 16-18 months) to produce its first crop. Nothing, it would seem, could have been more reasonable.

People who, in these islands, "drift into the workhouse from their inability or their unwillingness to earn a livelihood by labour" (p. 38) are worse than useless in the Colonies; nor can we wonder if the latter refuse to receive them.

Lord Brabazon very justly points out (p. 46) that a permanent system of colonisation, undertaken by the mother-country in conjunction with the Colonies, careful selection of intending emigrants being made, is the most promising solution yet offered of a difficulty, to cope with which is daily becoming more imperative. His remarks are sensible, and are expressed in language which will commend itself to the reader, alike for its moderation and its lucidity. If future numbers of the Series equal the present introductory treatise, an important step will have been taken towards throwing light on a burning, yet a very perplexing, question.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE epidemic of enteric fever amongst the soldiers at Lucknow has much abated.

COLONEL C. D. CLEMENTSON, of the Madras Staff Corps, has been permitted to reside out of India.

THE Commander-in-Chief has ordered the transfer from the 1st Battalions of at least twenty old soldiers, picked men, of good character and thoroughly reliable, to each company of the 2nd Battalions of Goorkhas now being raised, to form a nucleus of order and good discipline in each company.

THE Native Normal School at Amballa for the outturn of teachers for the Native Army, having proved a failure, has been closed with effect from the 31st of March last. Officers commanding Native regiments will now have the selection and appointment of moulvies, pundits, and grunts in their own hands.

THERE is hardly a regiment in the Bombay Presidency which has not been denuded of its officers to fill up the existing vacancies in those corps which have been ordered away. The appointment of Colonel Anderson to the command of the 3rd Brigade in Burma leaves the military authorities free to appoint the man of their own selection as Deputy Adjutant-General.

THE commands in Upper Burma are now as follows:—General White in chief command; Brigadier-General Griffiths, Madras, Commanding the Bhamo District; Brigadier-General Anderson, Bombay, commanding Mandalay District; and Brigadier-General Low, Bengal, commanding the Yemethen District. Each Presidency Staff Corps is thus represented on the Brigade Staff.

BRIGADE-SURGEON W. A. GARDINER, Medical Staff, has been posted to the permanent medical charge of the station hospital, Peshawar, vice Brigade-Surgeon W. Collis, who has been appointed to the administrative medical charge of the Peshawar District in anticipation of his promotion.

THE will (dated Nov. 23rd, 1877,) of Sir Henry Ricketts, K.C.S.I., late of Oak Hill-grove, Surbiton, Surrey, who died on Feb. 25th last, has been proved by George Henry Ricketts, C.E., the son, the value of the personal estate amounting to over £20,000. The testator makes some specific bequests to his children, and gives legacies to his brothers. All his real estate, if any, and the residue of the personalty, he leaves to his four children, George Henry, Jane Hester, Eliza Carew, and Mary Ann Letitia.—Illustrated London News.

WE have recently heard a good deal regarding the decline of trade. Yet the Indian railway receipts tell a different tale, there being an increase last year of 59 lakhs. The largest gainers have been the North-Western Railway, whose gross receipts exceeded by Rs. 55,00,651 those of the previous year; the East Indian, with an increase of Rs. 36,66,629; and the Rajputana-Malwa, which is credited with an increase of Rs. 22,76,601. A less favourable picture is shown by the returns of the Eastern Bengal Railway, of which the gross receipts declined by no less than Rs. 12,39,779 during the twelve months under consideration. In marked contrast to this unsatisfactory condition of things are the returns of a neighbouring line, the Northern Bengal, which show an increase in gross receipts of Rs. 1,37,655. The decrease of receipts in other guaranteed and State lines was small, the worst being the Wardha and Patna-Gya Railways, which netted respectively Rs. 48,865 and Rs. 47,296 less than they had done in the preceding year. All the recently constructed assisted railways, as they are termed, appear to have done well. The Bengal and North-Western shows an improvement in gross receipts of Rs. 10,47,319, the Southern Mahratta of Rs. 6,55,260, the Rohilkund and Kumaon and the Tarakesar, each of over a lakh and a-half. On the whole, the returns must be pronounced to exhibit the Indian railways, so far as their financial relations to the State are concerned, in an exceedingly satisfactory condition. So far from being a burden on the Exchequer, they yield it a small but increasing income.

THE EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of the East India Association, an organisation of Anglo-Indians and Native gentlemen, established in London and Bombay "for the disinterested and independent advocacy and promotion, by all legitimate means, of the public interests and welfare of the inhabitants of India generally," was held on Monday, May 31st, in the chamber of the Society, Charing-Cross, Sir Richard Temple, M.P., G.C.S.I., presiding. The report of the Council for the past year showed that the objects of the Association had been assiduously promoted, and congratulated the members on the steady progress made, unswayed by the influences of political parties in this country or class-feeling in India. Many of the suggestions made by the Association, and the principles advocated by it from time to time, have received the approval of the governing authorities, and have been wholly or partially accepted in the conduct of Indian affairs. Sir Richard Temple, M.P., was re-elected President of the Association; and among the Vice-Presidents, the Marquis of Ripon, the Marquis of Tweeddale, the Bishop of Durham, Lord Harris, Lord Randolph Churchill, Lord Stanley of Alderley, Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., Sir George Balfour, M.P., Sir James Ferguson, M.P., Sir Charles Trevelyan, Sir Arthur Cotton, General Scott, His Excellency Ragoonath Row, and the Nawab of Joonaghur; together with a large Administrative Council, comprising about thirty gentlemen who have served in India in various capacities, and who have taken an active personal interest in the prosperity and good government of that portion of the British Empire. General Sir Orfeur Cavenagh, K.C.S.I., is Chairman of this latter body, and General R. M. Macdonald Vice-Chairman.

GOOD SERVICE PENSIONS.

A GOOD deal has been said lately about honours and rewards, and a good deal of exception taken to the indiscriminating liberality with which they were dispensed after the Egyptian campaigns. It was pointed out that the rate of increase, not only from the days of the Peninsula and Waterloo, but even from the times of the Crimea and Afghanistan, proved that if the honours now allotted are but a fair recognition of merit, those who served in former wars can have been only very inadequately recompensed for their services. The comparison may be pointed by remembering that on the return of Sir Frederick Roberts from Afghanistan his advancement to the rank of Lieutenant-General was refused on the ground that it was "not expedient to make special promotions for field service," a reason which sounds simply ridiculous when read in connection with the Egyptian Gazettes.

But however much we may find to condemn in the recent distribution of honours, there is one department of military rewards which is not only subject to occasional irregularities, but which is so habitually abused as to call for thorough investigation and reform of the whole system

This is the Good Service Pension to which we have more than once called attention, and to which certain of our contemporaries have also referred in terms of hearty censure. The case is indeed sufficiently clear. For service in the field various honours are distinctly reserved, and these cannot be gained in any other way. But all officers, even the most conscientious and hard-working, have not the good fortune to see much active service. The majority must always be left behind, and the dull routine of cantonment work must be carried on by the many, whilst the most brilliant actions are being fought by the few. Amongst this number of quiet workers some will be distinguished above their fellows by superior diligence, knowledge, and, it may be, talent. They have no opportunity of displaying these qualities to the best advantage against the enemy; but the work they do is indispensable to the efficiency of the army, and it has long been admitted that their services are too valuable to be left unnoticed. For them a special form of reward was instituted. It is entirely distinct from the blaze of glory that decorates their more fortunate comrades. It is, in fact, a very modest affair indeed, and consists merely of a pension of £100 a year. One might suppose that those who attain to it would be left in peaceable possession of this little prize, and that, inasmuch as consolation stakes are not open to winners, their monopoly would never be interfered with by those who may fairly consider themselves the favourites of fortune. Yet, as a matter of fact, eight, at least, of these pensions are now held by men who have almost exhausted the list of honours, and it follows that eight men are excluded who had no hope of any reward at all save this.

And this unfair bestowal is not the only grievance connected with the Good Service Pensions. The name Pension, indeed, is a misnomer, for, unlike other pensions, it is lost on retirement. The officer of the Indian Staff Corps who, after having served long and faithfully, is accounted a suitable recipient for this reward, receives it for perhaps a single year, or two years before his retirement. When that takes place and he is most in need of its small pecuniary assistance it ceases again, and his chagrin is intensified by the reflection that engineer and artillery officers receive it for life, though on what principle this difference between himself and them is observed it would puzzle the most ingenious head to say. Again, when the pension ceases all evidence of its ever having been received ceases also; there is neither medal nor initial attached to it, and thus the reward which is supposed to express a fitting recognition of a life of exemplary service becomes almost a nominal compliment. If the impecunious Government cannot see its way to granting these pensions from the date officers become entitled to them until death, it would be much better to grant them from date of retirement. And it must be remembered that they were designed to be honours, the only honours generally speaking attainable by the class we are considering. Money is something, but it is certainly not everything in these affairs, and it is useless to argue in face of the present rage for orders and decorations against the sentiment that desires some outward and visible sign of the favour conferred. A medal would not be a very costly addition to the pension, and it would be a graceful acknowledgment that the wearer had deserved well of his country, though his own fortunes in serving her had been less brilliant than those of some of his neighbours.

THE Executive Commissioner of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, with other representatives from the Colonies and India, are to be entertained at dinner on Wednesday, the 7th of July, by the President and Council of the Institution of Civil Engineers, with the past presidents and past members of the Council. The Institution consists of 5,174 members of all classes, very many of whom are engaged in the Colonies and in India.

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION. INDIAN SECTION.

The June number of the Journal of Indian Art should be in the hands of every visitor to the Exhibition. The letterpress is carefully and accurately done, and the highest meed of praise must be awarded to Mr. W. Griggs for the admirable manner in which he has printed in colours facsimiles of certain striking specimens of oriental art, notably the cartoon from the Jeypore Razm Namah, the Jeypore enamelled epanlets, vase and bowl, the Ulwar glass painted panel and the Bikanir screen. These reproductions reflect the highest credit on Mr. Griggs's taste and skill. With regard to the wonderful specimens of carving shown on the gateways and screens of the several Courts of the Indian Section, it has been said that the ordinary British public walk past these with little eye to their marvellous beauty. To the careless or the ignorant the description given of the Art Ware Courts in the current number of the Indian Art Journal is to be commended, as, for example, that of the Jeypore Court:—

The Art-ware Courts are entered through a gateway, contributed by His Highness the Maharaja of Jeypore and carved by his subjects. The gateway is surmounted by a Nakarkhana, or Drum-house, such as is usually found over the entrance to royal residences or temples in which musicians play at stated intervals, and in regular order, certain tunes in honour of the sovereign or god, after which other strains are added at the will of the performers. In the kiosk on the top are arranged all the musical instruments which are usually played in a drum-house. On the front of the platform has been carved the Shamsha or picture of the sun, which is symbolical of the descent of the lords of Jeypore and of the Rajput chiefs of the solar race, and is, moreover, according to the Ain-i-Akbari, or Institutes of the Emperor Akbar—"a Divine Light" which God directly transfers to kings without the assistance of men. It is affixed to the gates or walls of palaces. On the opposite side will be found a representation of the moon from which the Indrabani, the other great branch of the Rajput race, represented by the Rajas of Jeysulmere and Karauli, is said to have sprung. On the same beam below the cornice on the front of the gate is engraved the motto of the Jeypore house, "Yato dharma stato jaya," "Where virtue or righteousness is there is the victory," in Sanskrit, with English and Latin versions. The Latin "Ubi virtus ibi victor" better expresses the meaning of the original than the English "Where virtue is—is victory," but, however worded, the idea is as appropriate for the entrance of a great Exhibition as it is for the motto of a State which has in many ways acted up to it. On the corresponding beam at the back the motto, "Ex Oriente lux,"—From the east comes light,—has been carved.

The central kiosk can be closed with purdahs or curtains of muslin, that is, cotton and silk cloth (silk alone was forbidden to be worn by Musalmans at prayer time, hence the fashion), of Indian make such as is used in Hindu palaces. To support the curtains chobs or metal poles have been provided. The banners on the rails are respectively the panch-rang or five-coloured flag of Jeypore, a small copy of the standard given to the late Maharajah at the Imperial Assemblage at Delhi by Her Majesty the Queen Empress and the Mahi marati or symbol of the highest nobility given by the Moghul Emperors, which was much prized. It consists of the golden head of a fish and of two gilt balls, all borne on separate poles. These symbols were brought from Delhi in the reign of the Emperor Feroksha, and so great was the honour deemed that the musicians in the Jeypore Nakarkhana played for three days and nights consecutively, and the whole city was given up to rejoicing.

RAJPUTANA COURT SCREENS—JEYPORE.

The gateway at the entrance of the Rajputana Court and the screens which form the walls of the Jeypore bays have been primarily constructed to afford more space for the display of exhibits, but they have been carved wherever possible to illustrate the position of wood-carving in the country. Jeypore, as a whole, is essentially a land of stone and stone-carvers, but, owing to the patronage of many wealthy bankers, who live in Shekhawati, the northern district of the State, a large number of carpenters have settled in the great towns situated in that sandy tract, which is almost devoid of timber. Some of the better workmen in past days may, however, have been attracted from Delhi by the Musalman Nawabs of Futtehpore and Jhunjhunu, formerly rulers in the district. In the unsettled times which preceded the British supremacy the great capitalists of India, who were for the most part Marwaris of the branch of the Jain faith known as Oswals, sought safety, for which, of course, they well paid, among the chiefs and nobles who lived in Bikanir, Marwar, and Shekhawati, in other words, on the verge of the country marked on our maps as the Great Indian Desert. In this way large towns have sprung up, such as Futtehpore, Nawalgarh, Jhunjhunu, Ramgarh, and Chirawa, and here the bankers or Seths and their retainers have lived securely, while their agents or gumasthas have earned in distant places, even as far as Hong Kong on the one hand, and Zanzibar on the other, heavy interest on their capital. As the agents left their families at their homes, and retained little money, the heads of the firms ran but small risk. The Seths have built magnificent temples and houses, and as good durable wood was scarce, they imported it from distant places and had it carved into door-frames, windows, or balconies. Wonderful old traditional designs have thus been preserved.

Following this rule, Surgeon-Major T. H. Hendley, in Medical Charge, Eastern Rajputana States, suggested that the timber necessary for constructing the Jeypore Screen should be cut and joined in Bombay and be then brought to Jeypore, where the Shekhawati carpenters should be allowed to enrich it by carving without unnecessary European interference. The scheme was adopted. The measurements of the screens were fixed in accordance with those laid down by the Royal Commission, and Colonel Jacob of Jeypore was good enough to put the ideas of the author into practical shape by supplying a design for the screens and an elevation for the entrance gate. The general design is the modified Saracenic in vogue in Upper India and Rajputana. The only instructions issued to the wood-carvers were, that as great a variety of patterns should be employed as possible, the ornament to be purely Indian, and no attempt to be made to work on other than the traditional lines. The men drew rough outlines with a pencil or even the graver, and each carver has done what was right in his own eyes, subject to the approval of the mistris or master-workmen, who had to judge whether the whole work would be in harmony or not. The screens were cut and joined by the Bombay Saw Mills Company, and the Nakar-Khana by Mr. Wimbridge, Head of the East India Art Furnishing Company of Gwalia Tank-road, Bombay. It has been urged that carving has been too lavishly employed, and that plain surfaces should have been left, by which the beauties of the ornamental work would have been the better displayed by contrast. Apart from the fact that Indian, like mediæval European work, is characterised by the patient ornamentation of all parts that are unseen, as well as of those that are visible, there is the important consideration that, had our village carpenters been interfered with in their designs, it would have been impossible to tell where to stop, and the screens would have no longer been examples, as regards ornament, of pure Indian skill. As it is now the work is a good example of what uneducated men in the old time could accomplish. It must be recollected that all the carving will be within a few feet of the eye of the spectator in the position it will occupy in the Exhibition, and that for this reason minuteness of detail has everywhere been justifiable. The endless variety of ornament, showing the fertility of invention, and the true artistic sense of the carvers, affords a field for much patient and pleasing study. Many of the workmen had never before left their homes in the desert. The general idea was that they were wanted in Kabul or even in distant England. Patience and the persuasive powers of Haji Mahomed Ali Khan, Nazim or Governor of Shekhawati, however, overcame the prejudices of a few men who came to Jeypore, and these soon induced others to follow their example. They have worked cheerfully and well, and it has been most interesting to watch them as they laboured.

On Monday last a piece of embroidery, which His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, Executive President of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, has done the Chinese merchants of Hong Kong the honour to accept, was hung up in the Hong Kong Court. It consists of a piece of white embroidered satin, over twenty feet in length, descriptive of the celebration of one of the birthdays of an illustrious statesman of former days, with all his children and grandchildren flocking from all parts to congratulate him on the occasion. The white satin is flanked by two smaller pieces of crimson satin, on each of which is embroidered in black silk letters a complimentary couplet. The silk is accompanied by a very handsomely-carved black wood table, on which to place the carved wood case which contains the embroidery when put away. In addition to these is also a very elaborately hand-painted scroll of silk, on which is written a brief complimentary address to the Prince of Wales.

The Malay House which has been erected in the Upper Gardens by the Government of Perak, one of the protected Malay States connected with the colony of the Straits Settlements, is now open to the public. The house, which is that of a Malay of the better class, consists of the "Balei" or reception house, where the owner sits and receives his friends; the "Ibu" or the middle house, which is the ordinary living place of the family; and the "Penangah," where the cooking is done. It is constructed entirely of materials sent to this country from Perak, and was built by Malays also sent home for the purpose. It is of full size, and furnished in the usual manner.

The first entertainment to our Colonial and Indian visitors took place on Friday afternoon at Kensington Palace, when the Princess Louise (who was attended by Lieut.-Colonel Collins and Hon. Harriet Phipps) and the Marquis of Lorne received nearly all the leading colonists and distinguished Indians in this country, the names having been furnished by the reception committee at the Exhibition and the Council of the Royal Geographical Society, while several hundreds, including Ministers who were, or had been, connected with the Colonial and Indian Offices, met the visitors from Greater Britain. Among those present were the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Prince Albert Victor of Wales, the Princesses Louise, Victoria, and Maud of Wales, the Prince and Princess Christian, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duchess of Teck and her children, Prince Louis of Battenberg, and the Grand Duke Michael of Russia. The West Indian band played a selection of music, and the band of the Queen's Westminster Rifles was also in attendance. The visitors, after being received by the Princess, inspected the various rooms in the palace, and great interest was naturally taken in the room where the Queen's first Council was held.

The Reception Committee of the Indian and Colonial Exhibition have arranged for the visit of a distinguished party of Indians and Colonials to Warwickshire on June 28th, 29th, and 30th to July 1st. The party, during their stay in Warwickshire, will make their headquarters at Leamington, where they are to be entertained at a banquet and conversazione on Monday, the 28th inst. On Tuesday the party will visit Birmingham as the guests of the Mayor, on Wednesday excursions are arranged to Warwick Castle, Kenilworth, and Stoneleigh Abbey, where the party will be entertained at lunch by Lord Leigh; and on Thursday a visit is to be made to Stratford-on-Avon, where the party will receive the hospitality of the Mayor (Mr. A. Hodgson, C.M.G.).

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

1, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Established 1834, by Special Act of Parliament.

Subscribed Capital, £500,000.

DIRECTORS.

JOHN FARLEY LEITH, Esq., Q.C., Chairman. | W. N. NICHOLSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

ANNUAL BONUS POLICIES. THEIR SPECIAL ADVANTAGES.

I.—Economy of Premium at Outset of Assurance.

The Premium charged by the "UNIVERSAL," on the Policy being effected, and irrespective of reductions by Cash Bonus annually after six payments, has always been from 5 to 10 per cent. lower than the average scale of Premiums charged by such few other Life Offices that divide Bonuses every year. The rates of the "UNIVERSAL" are also more economical than those of the average of Offices declaring Bonuses only once every five years.

II.—Low Rates of Premium Reduced by Annual Cash Bonus.

The practice of an Annual Division of Profits has long been considered by leading authorities to be the most just and regular that can be adopted. Its success in the case of the "UNIVERSAL" has been shown in more than half a century's experience, by enabling returns of Premium to be made to the assured averaging upwards of 45 per cent. of the original rates charged, thus practically reducing the average outlay for the Policy to 55 per cent., or 11s. in the pound, of the contract rates stipulated to be paid.

III.—Large Reversionary Bonuses Annually Added.

The sum allotted to each Policy at the Yearly Division of Profits may be applied either in reduction of the current year's Premium, or in annual augmentation of the amount assured, by the addition to the Policy of such Reversionary Bonus as each year's return of premium will assure as a Single Premium at the then age.

"THE TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST" has now an assured position in its large circulation in Ceylon, Southern and even Central and Northern India,
the Straits Settlements, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Northern Australia, Queensland, Central America, Natal, Mauritius, and the West Indies. From all sub-tropical planting settlements we have had cordial approval of the publication and an encouraging measure of support. The English, Indian, and Colonial Press have spoken in commendatory terms of the T. A., as also Directors of Public Gardens, from Sir Joseph Hooker,
F.R.S., downwards, and so have all planters.

* * No planter should be without it.

THE "TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST."

As a medium for English, American, and Australian ADVERTISEMENTS of goods suitable for the tropics, India, as well as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Java, and West Indies (Central America being included in that term), or connected with agriculture, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST stands unrivalled, the work being constantly in the hands of Native as well as European and American agriculturists. Being a Monthly Periodical, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST lies on the table and is very often referred to during each month, a fact which advertisers will know how to appreciate.

Mr. W. T. Thiselton Dyer, F.L.S., C.M.G., Assistant Director of Kew Gardens, writing of the T. A., refers to it as "an astonishing rep-tory of everything relating to the economic botany of the East."

* * For the sale of plants, seeds, machinery, implements, &c., used in tropical (tea, sugar, fibres, &c.) agriculture, no better advertising

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring any assets of the Oriental Bank Corporation now in liquidation, and for such other purposes as are specified in the memorandum of association.

As will be fully understood, the assets of the Bank comprised a great variety of securities in all parts of the East. Pending the realisation of these to the best advantage, the Official Liquidator of the Bank has, under the direction of the Court, kept up many of the estates upon which the Bank had charges, being sometimes first mortgages, sometimes mortgages subject to prior charge. In like manner, the Official Liquidator has continued to make advances to limited companies in Mauritius and elsewhere, for the upkeep of estates owned by such companies, where the Bank held by way of security either the estates advanced upon, or a sufficiently large proportion of shares, to retain the control of the conduct of the business of the companies to whom advances have been made.

The properties so worked by the Official Liquidator included estates in Ceylon and Mauritius. As regards the former, the Official Liquidator is entitled to sell the entire estates, free from any rights of mortgagors or others to redeem, but his claims in respect of the Mauritius estates constitute book debts. The estates in Ceylon and Mauritius are of considerable value, and the operations of the Official Liquidator during the last few years have resulted in a profit, as the Directors consider to be sufficiently shown by accounts in his possession, to which by his permission they have had access, and the future profits may fairly be expected to increase considerably.

This Company, and, before its incorporation, a number of gentlemen interested in the shareholders of the Oriental Bank, have been for many months past in treaty with the Official Liquidator for the acquisition of some of the Eastern assets of the bank, and the Directors are now glad to announce that terms have been arranged with the Liquidator for the purchase of his interest in some of the Ceylon and Mauritius estates, which have been selected as those most suitable to commence with. A conditional agreement for sale and purchase has been executed by the Liquidator and the Company, and now awaits the sanction of the Court.

By the terms of purchase the Ceylon estates are to be taken over as at 30th June, 1886. These Estates are reported to comprise an area of about 10,000 acres, about one-half of which is under cultivation. Coffee, cinchona, and cocoa have hitherto been the principal products, but tea is being largely substituted for coffee. Upwards of 2,000 acres are already under tea, a considerable portion of which is now in bearing.

As regards Mauritius, the estates comprise an area of over 11,000 acres, of which more than half are in cultivation, and estimated to produce an annual crop of over 8,000 tons of sugar. They include some of the finest properties in the colony, upon which very large sums have been expended in machinery and other improvements during the past few years, and all are reported to be well cultivated. A reduction in the cost of production, estimated at 25 per cent., has lately been effected, and large profits may be earned at a much lower range of prices than formerly prevailed. As explained, the Official Liquidator has been keeping up these estates, and the agreement for purchase provides that the Company shall take his place as from the 1st of January, 1886. The company will thus have the practical control and management of the Mauritius Estates, while the companies owning the estates, or the persons who have pledged their shares in such Companies, remain indebted to it; but most of these debts are old and have been much augmented by arrears of interest, so that at present there is little probability of any redemption being attempted on a large scale. But if this should be the case the Company would receive the full amount of debts and accumulations, which would considerably exceed the purchase money, and the proceeds could then be invested in the purchase of other assets.

The Directors are well satisfied with their purchase. The Company are to pay the Official Liquidator £152,960 in cash, and to issue to him 106,666 fully paid-up ordinary shares. The Official Liquidator attaches importance to the acquisition of the shares in the Company, as enabling him to retain an interest in the property sold. As already stated, he has been managing the estates for the past two seasons, and from the accounts in his possession to which the Directors have had access they expect the future profits to be very considerable.

The Directors confidently anticipate the acquisition from time to time of other estates now being worked by the Official Liquidator, and negotiations have already taken place between the Directors and the Official Liquidator with this view.

The above conditional contract, which is dated 2nd June, 1886, and made between the Oriental Bank Corporation by Thomas Abercrombie Welton, the Official Liquidator thereof, of the first part, the said Thomas Abercrombie Welton of the second part, and the Oriental Bank Estates Company (Limited), of the third part, can be seen at the Offices of the Company. The only other contract made by the Company is dated the 2nd June, 1886, and made between the Oriental Bank Estates Company (Limited), of the one part, and Thomas Colman of the other part, respecting the application for, and allotment and issue of the Company's shares. This also can be seen at the Offices of the Company.

Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned to the applicant in full, and when the number of shares allotted is less than the number applied for, the surplus paid on application will be credited in reduction of the further sums payable on allotment.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Company can be inspected at the Offices of the Company, or at the Offices of the Solicitors of the Company.

Prospectuses and forms of application can be obtained at the Offices of the Company, or from their Bankers and Brokers.

40, Threadneedle-street, E.C., London, 2nd June, 1886.

For the convenience of residents in Mauritius and Ceylon the Directors are empowered to issue shares expressed in silver money.

ing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service
Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies.
It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, Prussian, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 25th May; from Allahabad to the 23rd May; and from Calcutta, Madras, and Ceylon to the 22nd May.

At the meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council held recently, the Hon. Mr. Ilbert introduced his new Bankruptcy Bill, and after explaining its provisions and the proposed alterations in the existing law, it was referred to a Select Committee, who, however, will not report upon the Bill until the Council assembles in Calcutta.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY obtained leave to introduce a Bill to alter the constitution of the Trust of the Indian Museum in Calcutta.

THE Finance Committee, who are still engaged in making preliminary inquiries at Simla, will, it is expected, commence visiting the head-quarters of the Provincial Governments at about the end of July. The order in which they will make their visits has not yet been decided upon.

THE dacoits are becoming very active in Burma on the old frontier.

THEY have committed several serious depredations, and are reported to have murdered Mr. Thurston, the civil officer at Toundwingyi.

THE arrangement for the housing of the troops in Upper Burma are well advanced.

THE expeditionary party ordered to explore the Upper Burma ruby mines never started, owing to the cholera in the 43rd Assam Light Infantry, from which regiment the main body of the troops was to have been drawn. The cholera is, however, said to be decreasing.

COMPLAINTS are said to be numerous in regard to the conduct of the new Punjabi Military Police, organised for service in Upper Burma.

THE foundation-stone of a new fire-temple for the Parsee community in Bombay was laid on Sunday.

MILITARY officers are to be assessed to the income-tax on all sums received by them from private sources in India.

THE Resident of Hyderabad is paying a short visit to Simla.

THE Calcutta Chamber of Commerce have made a representation to Government regarding the block of business in the Bengal Presidency Court of Small Causes.

THE Chamber makes a severe indictment against the working of these Courts, and considers that their constitution and working requires reform.

THE Afghan Boundary Commission were at Doulatabad on the 14th inst. The health of the party is fair.

THE Committee of the Khojak Railway route recommend that a line should be constructed a little to the north of the present road over the pass.

THE steamer Adria is reported to have been lost near Zanzibar, while on a voyage to that port from Bombay.

THE whole of the 38-ton guns intended for the defence of Bombay will soon be placed in position.

THE Government of India have sanctioned an outlay of six lakhs of rupees for improving the water supply of Mhow.

COLONEL LOCKHART and party are still at Gilgit by the latest news received.

It is stated that Brigadier-General A. C. Johnson, commanding the Eastern District, Madras, becomes Inspector-General of Artillery in India.

THE Maharajah Dhulip Singh apparently prefers remaining at Aden to returning to Europe; so for the present he will continue to be the guest of the Resident, pending the decision of the Home and Indian Governments as to his future.

REGARDING the Japanese visitors now in Simla, Captain Y. Fukushima and Lieutenant S. Tanouchi will probably remain at the headquarters of Government for some time to study the organisation and administration of our army, while Dr. Sugewoya will start in a few days for a trip to several stations where there are large military hospitals, there to examine the working of the medical system.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL R. C. STEWART, Quartermaster-General, Madras Army, is appointed to the temporary command of the Haidarabad Subsidiary Force.

MR. J. B. LYALL, the British Resident in Maisur, is expected to arrive at Madras on the 24th inst., and will at once proceed to Bangalor to take over charge of his office from Mr. Girdlestone, the acting Resident.

THE mail steamer has resumed its usual monsoon running, starting on Tuesday afternoon instead of on Friday.

THE latest date of London letters received up to departure of mail was April 3th.

Two Mahomedans in Hyderabad city made a curious wager the other day, which resulted in the death of one of them. The deceased accepted a challenge that he should stand facing the sun from 8 A.M. to 6 P.M. A certain day was appointed, when a large gathering assembled to witness the tamasha, as they styled it. Bets of Rs. 100 a side were laid. The deceased took his stand gazing at the sun from the agreed time up to 3 P.M., when suddenly he dropped foaming from the mouth. Medical aid was soon summoned, but, before assistance arrived, life was extinct.

Notes of the Week.

THE state of affairs in Burma continues to be very unsatisfactory, notwithstanding that there are now in that country some 22,000 British troops. In Upper Burma there are about 12,000 men and forty-two guns, and yet dacoity-fighting continues, and valuable soldiers' lives are being lost. Of course, this is one of the necessities of military service, but if an efficient police force could have been organised and kept in hand the soldiers would have had less to do and to suffer. Owing to the absence of such a force it has been necessary to break up batteries and regiments into numerous detachments, and thus the work which falls upon the military in isolated posts is heavy and harassing in the extreme.

THIS splitting up of the British Regiments is said to interfere seriously with their efficiency, and one reason given for this splitting up is anything but satisfactory. "After certain experiences," says an Indian contemporary, "of the fighting powers of the Madras Sepoy, General Prendergast ordered that a 'stiffening' of British troops should invariably be applied to each flying column and outpost." This is not complimentary to the courage or discipline of the Madras Sepoy, and we take the liberty of thinking that the ill-natured hint of our contemporary is unjust. Properly handled and led, the much abused Madras Sepoy has always done good service in the field. If he fails now the fault must lie somewhere beyond the rank and file.

If feeding can do it, Imperial Federation ought to be a settled thing. The hospitality which is being shown to the Colonial and Indian visitors through the exertion of the Exhibition Reception Committee seems to be boundless, although subscriptions to keep it up continue to be asked for from the public. Some of the public, however, do not seem to know what is the qualification required from those who are being so sumptuously entertained, as not a few of the guests, whose names appear as assisting at successive banquets, can hardly be considered as "strangers within the gate."

THE unfortunate Colonial, who on arriving to help the cause of Federation found himself presented with an Income-tax paper instead of a menu-card, was, it is to be hoped, a solitary exception to the general rule which is supposed to rule at South Kensington. The victim did wisely in writing to the Times, and doubtless the Reception Committee have made "swift atonement for their first delay."

SCOTCHMEN have seldom had a more grievous wrong done to them by their English rulers than have the worthy sons of the North who lately in Calcutta found that their whisky had been watered in the Custom House there. The question put in the House of Commons to the Under Secretary of State, asking "if his attention had been called to an adulteration of MacGavin and Co.'s whisky, and whether he would communicate with the Government of India on the subject?" met with the prompt reply, "Yes, sir; the Government of India will be asked to inquire into the cause."

So far, so good, but who is to restore the lost spirit to the Scotchmen? As it was never out of bond the fraud must have been committed through the carelessness or connivance of the Custom House officials, but what is to supply the place of the once favourite but now adulterated brand? Will the children of stern Caledonia have to put up with Irish whisky, as they once had to do upon a certain St. Andrew's night many years ago? The result on that occasion was a melancholy one.

THE Finance Committee at Simla has issued a letter to various public bodies in which it is stated that "the task entrusted to the Committee is one of a financial nature." Upon this the Civil and Military Gazette remarks:—

The deliberations of the Committee are secret and confidential; but we can well understand that, before this result of combined wisdom could be so lucidly and so tersely formulated, there must have been a prolonged and anxious controversy. No doubt it was argued in one quarter that the task entrusted to them was not so much financial in its nature as social; or, in other words, that the Committee was sent to Simla as an ornament to society. Another contention probably was that the Committee's task was sanitary; they had come to Simla for the benefit of their health. One member, we expect, thought that music and the drama, rather than finance, would probably define their raison d'être; while another inclined to the idea that whist was intended.

In the meantime they have made the discovery quoted, and have adjourned sine die.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 13.

At this season of the year the question whether the monsoon rains are likely to come in good time and plentiful quantity becomes one of great interest to all dwellers in the plains of India, and one of supreme importance to the millions who derive a livelihood from agriculture. The news from Bombay and Colombo seems to indicate that the monsoon has already burst in both districts. In Bengal for the last fortnight the heat has been unusually oppressive, but all indications point to an early setting in of the rains.

The indigo districts in Lower Bengal have already had some rain, which has done much good, but more is required. The process of manufacture has already begun in some factories, and it will probably become general before the end of the month. Some showers have fallen in the Behar indigo districts, but not enough to enable the planters to commence the manufacture. The news from the tea districts is generally favourable, as also from the wheat districts of Upper India. The last official report states that the total area under unmixed wheat in the North-West Provinces and Oude included 5,240,381 acres, or nearly 1 per cent. less than the area of last year. The decrease has occurred in the Western districts, especially Meerut and Agra; while Oude and Benares show a considerable increase. The expected out-turn in the two provinces is put at 1,847,406 tons. The same report estimates the rapeseed crop at 520,000 tons, and the linseed crop at 152,500.

The results of the third opium sale of the current financial year, held at Calcutta a few days ago, are very discouraging. The average price realized was only 1,168 rupees per chest, which is 32 rupees less than the estimate in the Budget. Since the sale prices have been further reduced about 25 rupees per chest; and it is stated that they are likely to continue to fall. The causes of this are alleged to be the increased consumption of home-grown opium in China, and the belief that the Indian Government intends to sell a large quantity next year.

The official trade and navigation reports for April show a net increase in the value of merchandise imported of 70½ lakhs of rupees, as compared with the figures for April, 1885. Of this increase 28 lakhs were in Bengal and 44 in Bombay; while Madras shows a decrease of 2½ lakhs. There is a net decrease of 8½ lakhs in the exports. Bengal shows a decrease of 21 and Scinde of nearly 12 lakhs; but Bombay has an increase of 29 lakhs. The export of wheat in April was in Bengal 12,764 tons, against 16,532 in April of last year, and in Bombay 71,320, against 38,512 tons.

A debate of considerable importance took place in the Legislative Council on Wednesday last, on a motion to refer the Oude Rent Bill to a Select Committee. Mr. Quinton, the member in charge of the Bill, stated that the following were prominent facts which, in the opinion of the government, made it necessary to legislate. The province was densely inhabited by an agricultural population, 75 per cent. of whom were tenants at will, and liable to enhancement of rent and to eviction at the landlord's pleasure. During the past 15 years the average rise of rents had been 25 per cent., and the number of ejectments had greatly increased. The most important provisions of the Bill were that the peasant should have seven years' rest from the date of each enhancement, and that a landlord ejecting a tenant who was willing to pay a proper rent would have to allow him one year's rent as compensation.

Rana Shankar Bakhsb, representing the Oude Talookdars, while admitting the necessity for a Bill, strongly objected to the provisions regarding compensation, which he said implied the existence of rights where no rights existed.

Sir Stuart Bayley generally supported the Bill, but thought that the landlords might well object to being fined a year's rent if they wished to eject a tenant who was a nuisance to the neighbourhood.

The Viceroy said he was glad that the Talookdars had expressed acquiescence in the main provisions of the Bill. He could not agree that the clauses giving compensation for disturbance would deprive the landlords of a portion of their proprietary rights. The tenant's claim to compensation was placed on equitable considerations, and was fully recognised by all civilised nations. The Irish Land Act allowed from four to seven years' compensation, and this was not considered to interfere with proprietary rights. In Oude, moreover, the landlord, by granting an eight years' lease, would avoid the necessity for compensation. The Bill was then referred to a Committee.

At the same sitting of the Council Mr. Ilbert introduced a Bill to amend the law of imprisonment for debt. He said that when introducing the Bankruptcy Bill he had referred to this subject, and, while admitting that the present law was bad, had stated that he did not see his way to an amendment of it applicable to the whole of India. He thought, however, that the Government was justified in proposing legislation confined to a particular province, where the authorities were in its favour; and that being the case in the North-West Provinces and Oude the Bill would be confined to those provinces, but would be capable of extension thereafter to other provinces. The Bill would follow generally the provisions of the English Act of 1869, and restrict imprisonment for debt to certain special cases, treating it not as a measure of coercion, but as a punishment.

Scindia's health has not improved by his trip to Bithoor, and the latest news is that he is somewhat weaker.

It is stated that two junior Princes of Cashmere, Umur Singh and Ram Singh-Ho, who have been associated with the Maharajah in the administration since his accession, have announced in public Durbar their determination to resign and quit Cashmere at once. There has lately been considerable friction in Cashmere, owing, it is said, to the dismissal of old officials and their replacement by the new British Resident, as he is now called, the old title of "officer on special duty" having been abandoned since the death of the late Maharajah. This Resident is henceforth to be allowed to rely on the British flag, and to have a guard consisting of one Havildar, four Naiks, and some Sepoys.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 13.

Full details of Mr. Phayre's death have now been received. He left Minbu on the 4th inst. for Sagu with fifty Sepoys of the 2nd Bengal Infantry, thirty Punjabee military policemen, twelve Hindustani policemen, and twelve Burmans. On his arrival at Sagu he heard that Bosweh was at Ngape with a large gathering. He therefore left Sagu early on the 5th, and reached Padein, seven miles to the south of Ngape, on the evening of the 6th, and attacked and defeated Bosweh's advanced guard. Mr. Phayre then advanced to Ngape and took up a position in a pagoda. Nothing occurred on the 7th until 9 p.m., when the rebels opened fire, and kept it up until midnight. Next morning Mr. Phayre found himself surrounded by the insurgents. About 8 a.m. the rebels set fire to the town. Shortly afterwards Mr. Phayre sallied out with ten Sepoys and ten Punjabees to try and dislodge the rebels from a stockaded position in a pagoda about 200 yards away. When close to the pagoda Mr. Phayre was struck by three bullets and killed. A Punjabee policeman and a Sepoy tried to carry off the body, but were both wounded. Shortly afterwards another party went out to recover the body, but could not find it. All that day and during the night the Sepoys were under fire; and as they were running short of ammunition, they left Ngape on the morning of the 9th and returned to Minbu. Mr. Phayre had no European officers with him.

On the 10th a force of 100 British and native troops, with two guns, started from Minbu, and hoped to reach Ngape on the 13th.

Sir Charles Bernard, in an official minute announcing Mr. Phayre's death, says:—

"Mr. Phayre bore a name much honoured in Burma by men of all races. His career in Lower Burma was marked by firmness, as well as by great knowledge of and regard for the people among whom he worked. In Upper Burma, as Deputy Commissioner of the large and difficult district of Minila, he did excellent service."

Cholera has attacked the Prince Albert's (Somersetshire Light Infantry) at Mandalay.

THAYETMYO, JUNE 12.

A detachment of fifty of the Royal Scots Fusiliers and fifty Sepoys, under the command of Major Auchinleck, left for Tinedah this morning in search of Bosweh, the dacoit leader who caused the murder of Mr. Robert Phayre.

THE MISSION TO TIBET.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 13.

The mission to Tibet is still at Darjeeling, awaiting the arrival from Calcutta of eighty-two cases of articles to be used as presents. They include, among other things, some dozens of sponges and tooth-brushes, several musical boxes, and an electric lamp. Messengers have been sent to the frontier to disabuse the Tibetans of the idea that the mission will be accompanied by an army.

THE COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The opening of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition seems to have been a ceremony of more than ordinary importance. Since Her Majesty, attended by the Prince Consort, inaugurated the first International Exhibition in Hyde Park, which it was fondly hoped would mark the beginning of an epoch of universal peace and good-will, there has been, we are told, no ceremony more imposing. The staff of the South Kensington Shows have by this time learned all the arts of exhibition stage management; they have superb scenery and properties; and on this occasion the resources of a vast Empire are placed at their disposal. The enthusiasm evoked would seem to have surprised these most skilful purveyors of public diversion, apt though they may be to gauge the ever changing movements of the popular mind. Of late, the vague prospects opened out by the words "Imperial Federation" have attracted many who, with just cause, are dissatisfied by the nearer outlook on political affairs. It is by no means clear what Imperial Federation may eventually mean, since its warmest advocates seem to be in doubt as to the programme or policy that it were best to adopt. So it is not surprising that the display made by our British Colonies should be regarded with interest. India has been so much in the mouths of some very busy and very pushing, if somewhat self-seeking persons, that it is quite intelligible that the public should hail, with satisfaction, visible and tangible evidences of its being able to produce something more interesting than querulous complaint and foreboding.

We are assured, by a doubtless admirable body of agitators, that this most distressful country suffers from grinding poverty, and that its unhappy people live in a state of chronic starvation. Some philosophical observer, wandering in the South Kensington Courts, may perhaps note the fact that, from nearly every town and village, jewellery and other articles of luxury are sent. He may remark the vast number of objects made for purely festive and decorative uses; and it is by no means improbable that he will arrive at a conclusion diametrically opposed to that which, with such tiresome and mendacious insistence, is being constantly laid before English inquirers. It is like, indeed, that the evidences of wealth and bien être at the Exhibition, may lead him to make a mistake in over-estimating the prosperity and resources of the country; as dangerous as the belief that it is wretchedly poor and hideously oppressed. The English mechanic will marvel at the technical incompleteness (from his own point of view) of work, the artistic intention of which he will freely acknowledge. The English manufacturer, keenly looking out for new markets for the products of his hundreds of operatives and acres of mills, will anxiously search for a fabric or class of objects of general consumption in this country, which he can make cheaply, export largely, and so undersell the local producer. The advertising tradesman has already advertised his "Amritza" cashmeres and his Madras muslins. He will now doubtless cull other strange and fantastic names, and apply them with an intelligence which, though it may appear contemptible from this side of the seven seas, seems to serve its purpose with that somewhat stupid personage the British public. It is not to be expected that these two important classes—artisan and manufacturer—will view with satisfaction the efforts made to extend the sale of Indian goods in England. But they are aware of the historical fact that the exclusion of the finer products of the looms and ateliers of the rest of the world, and the isolation in which a system of protection maintained Great Britain, was for centuries a serious bar to its industrial progress. So, being pretty certain that if India can show anything worth copying, they will be able to copy it on their machines at a much cheaper rate, they will regard the models spread out before them with tolerance, if not with complacency.

After the first blush of surprise has passed it will probably be found that England has already vastly improved in these matters wherein it is generally supposed the Oriental artisan can give instruction; and we may expect to hear some sharp lessons from glib virtuosi and arbiters of tastes. We shall again, probably, be told that the brutal British Government has ruined a trade which never existed, that its attempts to make carpets have deprived hundreds of "caste weavers" of a livelihood, although no one on the spot has ever seen a "carpet caste weaver," nor by the most diligent search has been able to trace their existence in the past. But on some matters we shall hear unmistakable truths which it would be well to convey to the minds of our artisans.

Having invented aniline colours, the workmen of Europe have grown tired of their toys; or they soften and subdue them so skilfully, that their worst qualities are lost. The poor Indian, with untutored mind, regards these ugly and fleeting tints as in the highest degree new and precious.

We may be sure that the English public, its art critics, its newspaper writers, and the quaint groups of earnest "friends of India" who agonise over her at the Northbrook Club, who labour for her welfare at the Society of Arts, who gush over her at the meetings of the Indian Association; all the buzzing flies and midges fluttering over the slow wheel of Indian progress, will arrive at some notable conclusions, which will be recorded at great length. Observers in this country will have the pleasure of watching the effect of these conclusions on the people of India. It is a far cry from the Cromwell-road to the Delhi Dariba, and the ear of the Indian citizen is not quick to take in new sounds.

The district officer, to whose exertions the completeness of the Indian section is due, will perhaps have more reason than any one else for satisfaction and congratulation. It is true that the Department of Revenue and Agriculture directed, in a general way, the operations of the officers appointed in each Province or Presidency to make the Indian collections. But it was on the district officer that the brunt of the work fell. That, individually, he will receive on this occasion any more than on others, the credit due to him, may be doubtful. His rôle, as an individual, is one of hard labour and self-effacement. As a part of the Government of India, he will share in the chorus of admiration which seems to be freely given for complete and effective organisation. For the rest of us here in India, we may be permitted to hope that the Rule Britannia-like ring of Lord Tennyson's Ode may be an evidence of a change in the whirling current of popular feeling. The empire, whose greatness is shadowed forth in the pleasure grounds of Kensington, is safe from all hands but those of its own people. It may be that an exposition of its extent and importance may lead the populace to think twice before they allow the wedge, now inserted for its dismemberment, to be driven home. It may be that, for a time, persons like Mr. Seymour Keay and Mr. Hyndman will shrink into silence, or fail to find hearers. Nor is it improbable that a reaction, almost as deleterious to the best interests of the country as the destructive mood of dissatisfaction and despondency, may set in. We can only wait and see.

India, loaded with jewels and decked in costly stuffs, sits in a richly-carven pleasure-house, calmly awaiting the many-voiced verdict of those who write and talk in England. Meanwhile the Government of India has the satisfaction of knowing that, for a long time to come, it has done with exhibitions. It is not only that it shivers, at this moment, in one of its intermittent agues of economy; but from the Viceroy to the President of "Local Kemety," there is a strong feeling that we have had enough and more than enough of these tournaments of peace. That the last should be the best is satisfactory; but it is still more pleasing to know that there is henceforth to be rest in the land.

CONCERNING SOME NONSENSE.

(Pioneer.)

Brief notice has already been taken in these columns of the latest effort made in London to educate the British public in the comprehension of Indian affairs in the shape of an article entitled "Our Stake in India," which appears in the British Quarterly Review, from the pen of Mr. P. T. O'Callaghan. A few of the leading ideas which the writer puts forward as a foundation for his essay will give readers in this country a complete grasp of the views he represents. Indian affairs used to be discussed in Parliament, he says, to "yawning, empty benches," but now a satisfactory change is perceptible. "The appeal from the people of India to the electors of Great Britain and Ireland issued before the General Election burst like a meteor on the political firmament." It is hardly necessary to go beyond this sentence in order to forecast the contents of the article it inaugurates. Just as Professor Owen used to build up a whole skeleton from a single bone, the Indian political anatomist can readily supply the missing nonsense from any literary structure known to include a single example of certain hackneyed formulæ. For instance, we know that a conception of things embodying the idea just quoted, must rest on the theory that in the direction of Indian affairs by the Indian people the solution of all knotty problems of administration is to be forthwith sought. Accordingly, we find our essayist dilating on the readiness of the "teeming millions" of India to "upheave," as a consequence of having been "taught by the Press, the Post Office, the Telegraph, and all the other educational agencies that have lifted the Hindu into a political factor." Also, of course, we find him recognising Lord Ripon as "the greatest friend India has ever had," and recommending as a practical measure the following line of policy:—"Let the nation be drilled, educated, trusted; let no prejudice stand in the way of equality; let justice be done between State and State, and man and man, and there need be no fear of the future." Applying these principles to any given question of the day, we know what views they will bring forth in connection with finance; the doctrine they develop is familiar and simple. India under native rule had no national debt. Now its debt is over 150 millions. This is, of course, the surviving cost of British misrule. The methods of restoring a healthy tone to the pecuniary affairs of the State are to be sought for naturally in the abolition of the opium revenue—an immoral traffic—and in the abolition of the salt duty. "The minister who would abolish or reduce the salt tax in India would confer on the people as great a boon as was the abolition of the Corn Laws here." Coupling these reforms with a liberal rearrangement of the land tax, in such a spirit that the Government should no longer grasp an excessive share of the produce of the soil, we can readily begin to see Mr. O'Callaghan's theory of Indian progress taking symmetrical shape.

It is a law of nature, as Moore expresses it, that half in sun and half in shade this earth along its path advances; and making use of a somewhat intricate metaphor, he suggests a hope that only that side the sun shines on may ever meet his lady's glances. In the same way it may be recognised that half illuminated by reason and the other half shrouded in the blackness of imbecility, the great public discussions of our democratic epoch proceed along the grooves of time. The black side is amusing sometimes, and this explains the cynical enjoyment one may derive from such a paper as that of Mr. P. T. O'Callaghan in the British Quarterly Review. But it is to be regretted that the public at home should not have the key to the comicality of such writing. A good conscientious British voter, for example, picking up the periodical before us at his club, and settling down for a lesson in Indian affairs, may easily resent a mental surfeit of Lord Cornwallis and the three F's, but he does not at once perceive what he ought to be reading about instead. He may be sensible of great wretchedness as he learns that British Government in India, which he hoped had been conducted on sound principles, had ended by saddling the country with a debt of 159 millions sterling, besides costing seventeen famines and 16,000 lives. But he misses all the fun of the paper which instructs him to this effect for want of local information, and he will not be a bit better able to enjoy himself if he follows up the clue suggested by Mr. O'Callaghan, and procures that "very able work on India," India for the Indians, by Mr. William Digby. The worst of the situation is that no one at present in a position to answer the grievous nonsense talked at home by the Indian democrats and their friends has any adequate motive for taking the trouble. There is a brief season in the life of every returning Anglo-Indian during which he is keen upon writing about Indian affairs, and talking of them in public if occasion offers. And whenever it chances that such returning Anglo-Indian is a man who combines the literary faculty with administrative knowledge, he may run a spear for the moment through such wind-bags as Messrs. O'Callaghan and Digby. But in the nature of things the democratic assailant is always a more active man than the counsel for the defendant in any political controversy. By the hypothesis he or his clients have something to get by fighting,—some tangible purpose to achieve. The apologist of the status quo has a mere intellectual sense of the fitness of things to support him. With his client he can have no direct relations. A Government attacked can only, as far as it is concerned, rely upon its vis inertiae and latent power of rebutting specific charges whenever they may take official shape. So for the defence, in such a paper war as that raging now round all topics of Indian administration, there is very little ever said, and one can only trust that not a few people, even among British readers of such articles as that before us, may spontaneously develop the idea that probably the characteristics of the "permanent settlements" have not been discovered in this present year of grace for the first time; that if India has grown a big national debt in a few years, the money is probably not owing for fireworks the Government have been letting off, or for champagne it has been drinking, but may be—not remotely—associated with the fact that in the same few years India has been setting herself up with the plant and fixtures of modern civilisation. The absurdity of such articles as Mr. O'Callaghan's leaps to the eyes in a very glaring way for readers who are acquainted with the facts, and one is tempted in that way to suppose that it cannot be unnoticed altogether, even by readers without that safeguard.

TIBET TRADE.

(Englishman.)

The name of the city of Lhasa is surrounded with a glamour of mystery only partially dispelled by the few travellers who have told us of it. The holy city is vaguely shadowed forth in our fancies like Tennyson's "dim rich city of Caerleon" as a wondrous home of beauty and wealth; and the imagination is more strongly attracted from the jealousy with which the precious vision has hitherto been guarded from our sight. Travellers, too, have spoken of the abundance of gold throughout the country, to be had for the trouble of scooping it up with the sand of the country streams. But, "golden rivers" have found a place in the travellers' tales of all new countries; and they have never yet been able to bear scientific scrutiny. It may be that Tibet is rich in minerals; but, so far as our present information goes, it is a poor and entirely undeveloped country. No mines are known to be worked; there are no important manufactures, and a comparatively small area is under cultivation; and the greater part of Tibet might be fairly described as one vast grazing-ground for innumerable flocks and herds. What hidden resources lie under the surface of these pasture lands cannot be guessed; the discovery must be left to the influences of free trade which it is now hoped to establish. At present Tibet seems capable of giving us little, and of receiving little in exchange. Wool and yak-tails are already exported in what, considering the restrictive tions placed upon trade, may be regarded as considerable quantities; and it is probable that, were these restrictions removed, the trade in wool would rapidly reach large proportions. It might be expected also that a considerable business would be possible in hides. But this exhausts the list of probable exports of any importance; and the catalogue is meagre. In exchange for these articles, the Tibetans would probably take increased quantities of piece-goods, indigo, and other dyes, brass and copper, salt, and tobacco. It is possible, also, that some means may be derived of making Indian tea palatable to Tibetans. The problem has not yet been solved, but it would be unreasonable to expect that, with a tea-drinking population on one side of the mountain, and a tea producing country on the other, and given reasonable facilities for trade, the producers and consumers will not be brought together. The prospect thus opened out are not brilliant, but, at any rate, a substantial beginning will be made and future possibilities may be greater than we are now able to estimate. From a purely commercial point of view, therefore, which is, perhaps, the only aspect in which it is possible to regard it, the attempt now to be made is worth making, and we hope to be able, before many months are over, to congratulate Mr. Macaulay and his colleagues on their success in opening the Tibetan passes to free intercourse between the two countries.

FAIR PLAY.

[Dulce est de Seepere in loco.]

SIMLA, May 11.—The meeting of the Legislative Council, to consider the Bankruptcy Bill, which was fixed for the 13th inst., has been postponed till the 20th, on account of the Seepie Fair, which commences on Thursday. See yesterday's telegram.

The jharan-coated subalterns
Are mounted and away—
Shall we, his Lordship's Councillors,
Be laggards more than they?
The Matrons of the Mountain haste,
The jocund with the jeldie,
Where Rockcliff spoons Elysium,
And Lowrie's Abergeldie.

Ho! gallop up the Jakko road!
Hi! scuttle down the hill!
Let be your legislative load—
The burden of the Bill!
Come ye who rule a people's fate,
Old men with grizzled hair—
Pack up the hamper and the crate,
We ride to Seepie Fair.

There let us pass the foaming glass,
In place of measures dry;
And form Select Committees on
The padé and the pie.
There let us bid the swings revolve,
And frolic on the green;
As fits the trusted Ministers
And Stewards of the Queen.

To horse, to horse, my aged ones!
Staid senators and hoar—
For life is short, and laws are long—
The steed is at the door.
And if men sneer, and if men scoff,
'Tis little we shall care,
The Council of the Empire stands Postponed—for Seepie Fair.

TOM-TOM PATRIOTISM.

(Bengal Times.)

Bengalee patriots of the tom-tom, or indeed of any other order, noisy, useless, and merely sensational, admitting their entity, rarely go further in the expression of their views, prospective and retrospective, when met face to face by polemical antagonists, than to indulge in injurious speculations on the alleged problematical virtue of many generations of their opponents' female ancestry, and a touching, and probably painful picture being drawn of systematic decadence from the severe principles of a Pamela, applied with excoriating personality to rival candidates, a Bengalee patriot, in a majority of cases, feels that he has deserved well of his country. A Bengalee crowd, moreover, is generally good-natured, and unlikely to emphasize its emotions by overt acts of depredation. Granting our Bengal peasantry a wide margin of credit, however, for law-abiding tendencies, and admitting the innocent character of its conventions, it might be profitable to inquire to what end mass gatherings are called together, what public purpose they are destined to serve, and what ultimate results it is anticipated are likely to flow from their alleged deliberations? That they denote any clearly defined mode of rational expression of feeling, that they are designed to reflect any constitutional system of development, in reference to regenerating agencies silently leavening the masses with patriotic sentiment, does not appear apparent on the surface. It needs no philosophy to teach us that the world is preparing for a great crisis—a universal struggle for emancipating human intellect from the slavery of ignorance, and in this silent yet sure revolutionary development there is a steady outgrowth to be traced of gradually progressive intelligence. To some extent every nation, class and creed, must take part in this movement, and a pertinent inquiry quickly presents itself—what part has agricultural, mechanical, or commercial Bengal? In the hallowed Conservatism of ages, sanctified by cycles of custom, and endeared by centuries of association, a Bengalee peasant lives, moves, and has his being. Steam and its uses, electricity and its grand discoveries, medical science and chemical analysis, are to him adaptations to European life and habits; he will have none of them. For him, as for his compatriots in other branches of industry, no truer word was written than that man wants but little here below. Having the simple conveniences of life well within his means, he is perfectly contented to glide through his three-score and ten years, holding on to a primitive plough tail, or sculling a dug-out. Rain and sun are to him recurrent phenomena fixed in a certain orbit of Providential routine, and his bucolic mind, swayed by sage reflections on the immutability of human affairs and anchored on inexorable kismet, controlling his preconceptions of the inevitably recurrent decrees of fate, derives no consolation from a prospective advent of development, when he will be asked, as it were, to abolish Allah, to abjure those rustic sages, who, for a handful of paddy, or, probably, a few coppers, assuredly less than would command three acres and a cow, can not only forecast, but guarantee him a plentiful harvest, and can generally set at rest all uneasiness regarding the result of his case in Court, and the ultimate overthrow of his litigious enemy. When can our Native friends hope to convert these simple village patriarchs into tribunes? Agriculturists, mechanics, and traders in Bengal are much of a muchness—ab uno disce omnes. Upon what authority do so-called reformers ask us to believe that these clodhoppers are educating to a level of intelligence that will enable them to discuss an Act of the Legislative Council, in view to its modification? More than a quarter of a century's tail-twisting may have constituted them expert at obtaining from their oxen a maximum of labour on a minimum of nourishment, but has it enabled them to depart one iota from the time-honoured traditions of forefathers they are apt to speak of with bated breath, as marvels of wisdom, of altogether superior fibre, mental and physical, to the present race of degenerated humanity? Are Bengal's future patriots to spring from these potential Cincinnati, whose present tom-tom aroused faculties are stayed upon glowing prospects of tamasha and nalack and metai?

WITH A CONVOY THROUGH THE KHYBER.

[From a Correspondent.]

The sun has done its day's work. It has frizzled the backs of tillers and reapers. It has bemuddled the brains of poor Clarke of the Civil Service, who has been stewing all day in kutcherry. It has vanished below maidan, sand-hill, bungalow and temple; and locally it has disappeared in the golden light that crisply outlines the purple shadows of the delectable hills overlooking Fort Jumrood. All day long a seething string of camels, men, oxen, sheep, goats, women, and lambs from Peshawur have been pouring into the Jumrood Serai. The human portion have already pitched their tents. They don't take long to pitch—these Afghan tents. They are but threadbare blankets supported at the corners by roughly-hewn branches from trees.

Night creeps on apace. The evening meal gives place to the fumes of the hubble-bubble, and the silence of mastication to the buzz of tittle-tattle and small talk. The mosquitoes and sandflies, sleeping on the arms and legs of their victims, wake up. It is time for their evening meal, and they are hungry. The crickets chirp, and the croaking frogs "guggle-gobble" in the streams. Night has commenced in earnest. I will go to bed. I go, but, alas, not to sleep. Sandflies yap, and round my ears mosquitoes hum. I wait and listen for the ominous silence that I know from long experience precedes the desire to scratch a bitten particle of flesh. I have no curtains and no punkah. I finger my revolver, but the chances of hitting a mosquito on the wing in the dark are small; so I put it away again, turn over and try to go to sleep on the other side. No use. Some five-and-twenty Sepoy entries are incessantly howling to each other that "all is well." I am glad of that, really, but I wish they would depute one of their number to let me know, say once every two hours, instead of howling it collectively every twenty minutes. The Guard are just in front of me. They are rehearsing for a comic opera. They can't be baying at the moon, because there isn't one. I don't care for the music, and I don't understand the words. I could overlook the faults of the many concerted pieces; but I cannot overlook the fact that one internal sepoy is using the cracked but sonorous time-gong for a drum!

Morning breaks at last, as Indian mornings will do even after the worst of nights. Long before the sun is over the horizon, the convey toll have been collected in the serai (they are worth some Rs. 70,000 a year), and the caravan has started on its journey through the Pass, escorted by a couple of companies of the Khyber Levies. Each little hillock in the neighbourhood of the road between Fort Jumrood and the Shadi-Bagyar outpost is crowned by a couple of "armed and loaded" levies, who keep watch over the advance of their charge through the territory of those thieving outlaws, the Kuki Khels. In and out of little valleys, over little hills, again along the flat, and we are at the mouth of the Pass. The sun has risen, and so have the flies. The heat and glare are becoming considerable, but once in the Pass, we begin to ascend almost immediately; and by the time we are on the Shagai heights, we are through the property of more murderous cut-throats—the Sipah tribe—and some 1,500 feet higher than when we started and cooler in proportion. Through more Kuki Khels; through the Kamrai Tribe, whose domains extend to Sultan Tara; then through the country of the Kabbar Khels, and we arrive at Ali Musjid, the historical Fort where we first drew blood in 1879. Wali Mahomed Khan, the Chief of the Zakha Khel tribe, met us on the road soon after leaving the fort, and being on horseback, he joined our cavalcade. As he was in command of the Fort during its attack, we humoured his inclination to be talkative, and heard his first impressions of that memorable day. He told us that, when the defenders saw the smoke, and heard the boom of our first gun from the Shagai heights, they cried "God be praised, their ammunition waggon has blown up." When the shell landed in a hut, and sent the souls of five men into eternity, the cry of exultation became a wail of grief. "What devil is this," they cried, "that not only knocks down a wall, but is good for accurate ball practice when it gets to the other side?" Mr. Wali Mahomed Khan said that, before the day was over, he was glad to leave a p. p. c. card on the residents of Fort Ali Musjid.

From the Fort up to Lundi Kotal there is a gradual ascent of another 1,500 feet. Passing through Gurzura, we leave the Malik Din Khels behind us, and we are in the thick of Zakha Khels till we reach a ravine near Lundi Kotal. From this point to Lundi Khana, the Shinwari tribe hold possession. With the exception of the Shinwaris all these tribes are branches, or rather the component parts of the great Afridi tribe. Each is at deadly enmity with the other. Their villages, of some eight or ten houses each, are surrounded by twelve feet walls, flanked at the corners by round loop-holed towers. War and peace alternate week by week; and often even day by day. There is not much difference between the two. In one case the sheep graze outside their village walls, in the other they take their chances of food and life inside. In peace times a man smokes his hookah under a tree near his sheep; in time of war he climbs up into his bastion, and huddle-bubbles as contentedly as possible throughout the day. He occasionally removes the stem from his mouth to look along the barrel of his rifle, and eject a piece of lead in the direction of an incautious foe, who perhaps has forgotten that war was declared the day before. The strife ends as suddenly as it commenced. A man's pugaree, a woman's earring or a baby's pair of pyjamas are returned to their rightful owner, and peace reigns till the morrow, when a man's throat cut, or a couple of stolen sheep afford an excuse for the recommencement of hostilities.

We have ridden, and consequently arrive at our destination long before the convey. It is nearly 6 P.M. before the head of the column appears through the gorge that opens on to the Lundi Kotal plateau. Pouring into the plain come strings of foul-smelling camels, of foul-mouthed Pathans and Cabulis, men bound for Bokhara, Herat, and Persia, taking up bales of tea and Indian merchandise. Here and there a camel, in addition to its load, has its young hoisted on its back; but as often as not the thing of tender years has to "foot" it like its parent, and, moreover, if camels are few and loads many, every beast must carry a load suitable to its years. Bullocks, asses and goat, sheep and young lambs, lend their lungs gratis to the blatant screeches of women and the plaintive wails of children.

Tents are soon pitched, fires lit, and the evening meal cooked and swallowed. Soon the grey smoke from the huddle-bubble joins its blue companion from the fire, and we know that those travellers, squatting in groups round the camp fires, are as happy as kings. They talk of the thousand and one things they have talked about thousands of times before. They tell the same old stories that their grandfathers told their fathers, and what their grandchildren will tell their descendants; then come the same old songs with the same old tunes. A party of Shinwari musicians present themselves and beg to be allowed to give the dress circle, or upper ten, an entertainment. We permit them to do so, and they sing us songs of Cavagnari, and chant an ode about the Umbeyle campaign. They give us Afghan selections of interminable length, and a demon youth makes night hideous with his drum. He bethwacks, thumps, batters, and belabours that skin in a thousand different attitudes. I pray he may put his foot through it; but it must be a sacred or theosophical drum, for it miraculously escapes the thin pair of legs that must go through the skin, like a finger through a paper jam-pot cover, if he only will make a mistake. The drum, however, comes out unscathed. We tell the musicians they may go; that we have enjoyed their performance immensely, and we fix a night for a repetition, when we know we shall be back at Peshawur. The night has far advanced now, and our fellow-travellers of the caravan have sought the shelter of their tents, and have allowed the clattering hum of their tongues to rest for a few short hours in sleep. To-night neither mosquitoes nor sandflies trouble us, and when we wake in the morning the sun is high in the heavens, and the caravan has vanished from the plateau. It is three or four miles beyond Lundi Khana where the responsibility of the Khyber Levies ceases, and that of the Ameer's troops commences. Nothing remains except a few heaps of refuse, and a few smouldering fires to mark the passage of a convoy through the Khyber.—Civil and Military Gazette.

BENGAL.

EXTENSIVE DEATHS FROM CHOLERA.—The following statement, which may be taken cum grano salis, appears in a Calcutta native paper:—"It is reported that in one single village, named Madhab-Diar-Char, in Furridpore, three hundred persons have died of cholera through want of medical assistance. The cause of the epidemic is scarcity of water, which we reported the other day."

A FORTUNATE POLICEMAN.—At the close of the recent trial at the Calcutta High Court Sessions of the two prisoners convicted of Post Office frauds, Mr. Justice Norris spoke in high terms of the services rendered by Inspector Okhoy Coomar Bannerji, by whose exceptional energy and vigilance the fraud was detected and brought to light, and by whose excellent management of the case the prisoners were traced and the money recovered. His Lordship directed that the money should be made over to the Postal authorities. A large portion of the Rs. 2,000 reward offered by the Postal authorities in this matter will fall, it is said, to the share of Inspector Okhoy Coomar Bannerji.

MADRAS.

THE LATE COLONEL KNOX.—A handsome brass tablet to the memory of Colonel Knox was erected in Trinity Church, Bolarum, on the 30th ult., corresponding to the one lately erected to the memory of Lieutenant Innes and Seymour.

HYDROPHOBIA AT OOTY.—The South of India Observer says:—"Rabies appear to be epidemic in Ooty just at present. We hear of no less than four dogs having been destroyed on this score during the past fortnight. In one instance the dog—a pet terrier of diminutive size—attacked and bit his mistress and four children. The mistress—a native lady—applied to a European neighbour for advice; but when she was told that she must cross the 'Kalapani' to Paris, and place herself and progeny under M. Pasteur's care if she desired to be insured against the effects of the bites, she shuddered and elected to remain and take the chance of hydrophobia in India."

MYSORE STATE RAILWAY.—The Bangalore Spectator says:—"We are in a position to state that the Mysore Government the other day despatched a telegram to the Southern Mahratta Railway authorities to come and take charge of the line, and consequently the Agent and Manager, Mr. Stewart, Traffic Manager, Mr. Craik, and the Locomotive Superintendent, Mr. Witcombe, have come to take over the line after inspecting the same. We also expect the Examiner of Accounts, who will be here very shortly. They have inspected the Railway offices, the Gubbi and Mysore lines, and are about to make all arrangements to introduce their own system of working."

AN INTERESTING DESERTER.—A deserter from the Cheshire Regiment of the name of Woodbridge was arrested and brought up before the Black Town Magistrate at Madras on Friday last. In his statement to the Court, Woodbridge, who stated he was born in 1870, said that when he was in Forest Gate School, he was told he was heir to the Woodbridge property, yielding £800 per annum. Shortly afterwards he had gone to Guernsey, where he received a communication from a solicitor named W. W. Gunstin on the subject of his claim. After the matter had been placed in his hands Mr. Gunstin died and his widow placed his claim in the hands of another solicitor named Ham, with whom he held correspondence till March 1885. After this all correspondence ceased. As he was unable to get further tidings of his heirship, he was induced to desert his regiment in order to get to England to prosecute his claim. His Commanding Officer, Colonel Patton, interested himself on his behalf, and even communicated with a person named Woodbridge who was a Lieutenant in the Middlesex Volunteers, and who, he had reason to believe, was his (Woodbridge's) uncle, and hostile to his claim. He did not know what answer Colonel Patton got in reply, as that officer had since retired from the command of the regiment. It was under this unsatisfactory state of things that he deserted in order to get to England. His worship directed the man to be made over to the military authorities.

BOMBAY.

GUN ACCIDENT AT EOMBAY.—Mr. Thomas Widdowe, fourth engineer of the steamship Sumatra, of the P. and O. S. N. Co., went to Elephanta on Sunday, in company with the steward and second engineer of the steamer, on a shooting excursion. While the steward was loading a rifle it accidentally exploded and the bullet passed through Mr. Widdowes's right thigh. The wound was immediately bound up by his friends, and he was brought to Mazagon and from thence was taken to the European General Hospital for treatment. He now lies in a serious condition.

THE MEKRANIS AGAIN.—A Bombay paper says the Mekranis of the native State of Junaghad have of late been very troublesome. They go about plundering property, and killing or mutilating those who endeavour to pursue them. The Junaghad police have failed to successfully cope with these Mekranis, who are constantly on the move. The Government of Bombay, it is understood, have frequently remonstrated with the Junaghad authorities to try and bring these rebellious Mekranis under control, but hitherto without any success. It is said that some of the members of the Junaghad police have been in secret alliance with these Mekranis, who are thus enabled to set authority at naught. The Government of Bombay have deputed Major Humphrey, Superintendent of the Ahmedabad Police, to Junaghad, to take charge of the police of the State.

PARSIS AND THE QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY.—The Times of India says:—"We hear that a number of Parsi gentlemen, under the leadership of Mr. K. N. Kabrajee, intend to celebrate the birthday of the Queen-Empress (the 24th May) by a concert of loyal and patriotic Native songs. There are, we learn, in the different vernaculars, many songs and poems in praise of the Queen-Empress, and in favour of the British rule and loyal attachment to the Queen and to India, and these have only to be adapted to the different Native melodies. The programme for this year's entertainment comprises about fifteen songs, fourteen in Guzerati and the well-known song of Davi Shri Victoria in Marathi. The concert will take place in the Framjee Cowasjee Institute, and the meeting, though private, will be as large and influential as possible. It is hoped that this concert may become a regular feature on the Queen's birthday in future, and, as the motive as well as the music will be essentially Native, we wish the promoters every success. The attempt to introduce "God save the Queen" into the different vernaculars was an inevitable failure, for it was impossible to transplant the associations that give every national anthem its true value, but a selection of loyal Native songs sung to genuine Native tunes will have an individual character of its own, and we hope that the promoters of the "Queen's Birthday Concerts" will publish a translation of the songs on their programme, so as to let Englishmen appreciate their good feeling and good fellowship.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES.

MR. C. L. TUPPER, C.S., Junior Secretary to the Punjab Government, has rejoined his appointment from leave.

THE NEW GHOORKA BATTALIONS.—General Murray, C.B., commanding the Lahore Division, is said, by the Civil and Military Gazette, to be still busily engaged at Dharmasala and Bakloh, in connection with the raising of the two new Ghoorka battalions.

THE TIBET MISSION.—The Englishman says that the last news from the Tibetan passes brought in, on apparently good authority, is that the guards have orders not to allow so much as a letter to be taken across the frontier, and that the Mission will not have a chance of effecting an entrance into Tibet; but the paper adds that "it would be a mistake to place implicit faith in rumours of the kind." The Indo European Correspondence on the other hand says:—"The latest news regarding the Tibet Mission is favourable to the prospect of its admission to the country."

COLLISION ON THE CENTRAL INDIAN RAILWAY.—A somewhat serious collision, unfortunately attended with loss of life, occurred on Thursday morning at the Habra Station of the Central Bengal Railway, some twenty-eight miles from Calcutta. It appears that the No. 54 down passenger train to Calcutta was due at Habra at 7.46 A.M., and usually reaches Sialda at 9.32 A.M. At the former station a ballast train, containing a number of coolies, was waiting on the siding for the down passenger train to pass. The passenger train arrived punctually to time at Habra, but owing, it is said, to the points to the siding being open, it rained into it, and collided with the rear end of the ballast train. The train was running at a reduced speed, and hence a most serious accident was avoided; but the two coolies who were sitting on the top of one of the open waggons of the ballast train were killed on the spot, and a third man so seriously injured that he is not expected to survive. The passengers in the other train all escaped uninjured, with the exception of five, who were very slightly bruised. These men were at once brought down to Calcutta and examined by a doctor, when it was found that nothing serious was the matter with them. The passenger train escaped damage, and, after a detention of some fifty minutes, was allowed to run down to Sialda, where it arrived safely. Mr. Barclay, the Traffic Superintendent of the Eastern Bengal Railway, and some other officials, have proceeded to the scene of the accident. It is said that the Native pointsman concerned is in custody.—Englishman.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HOBSON-JOBSON.*

Colonel Yule has long been known as one of the first living scholars in the line of mediæval research. His "Marco Polo" placed him "per saltum" at the head of the few—the very few—who investigate facts before launching them on the ocean of criticism; but high, and deservedly so, as his reputation stands, the work which, in concert with a scarcely less gifted coadjutor, the late Mr. Burnell, he has now given to the world will, we venture to think, raise him to a still higher pinnacle—indeed, he is now facile princeps, without a rival in the peculiar line which he has made his own. It is not often the lot of a reviewer to award pure, unalloyed, and none the less most merited, praise. It may seem fulsome flattery to write that there is not a single demerit in the work. Whether the volume be perused for profit or merely to while away the fitful hour, there is no room for improvement. Even as regards the views propounded, the acumen displayed is so great, the arguments are so convincing, that although the reader may feel at times disposed to question the theories tendered to him for acceptance, yet he cannot but help feeling that his own opinions are equally open to doubt; and in a matter which can never be authoritatively settled there is wide room for divergent views and conflicting theories. The only point we could have wished to have seen otherwise is as regards the title. The work is a most erudite examination of the various Anglo-Indian colloquial words and phrases—some the profound and scientific experiences of the learned, others the mere jargon and common-place parlance of the ignorant. True it is "chit-chat" scarcely less interesting than instructive, but surely it imparts to the work an air of frivolity to call it "Hobson-Jobson," and yet withal, in the whole range of Eastern literature, it would be difficult—we had almost written impossible—to recall a single publication which displays more earnest investigation, more universal scholarship, or more sound deductive power. Flimsy? Why, there is not a sentence from beginning to end which does not bear the impress of a master's mind, and a veteran's footstep. Lest, however, these remarks may seem couched in too high a strain of panegyric, it may be well to glance briefly at some of the articles—four or five thousand in number—which meet the eye.

In India, and, indeed, equally so in England, to "run amuck" is a common term—well "understood" of the people, especially as regards those with extravagant sons. Colonel Yule gives us the derivation from the Malay countries, where there is a word, "mengamuk," signifying to "make a furious attack." In the process of time there arose on the Malabar coast a clan of desperadoes called by old travellers "amouchi" or "amuco." The spirit of lawlessness thus engendered found vent in a singular custom, to wit, that after the Zamorin—or sovereign—had reigned twelve years a great assembly was held, when that Prince took his seat surrounded by his dependents fully armed. Anyone might then attack him, and the assailant, if successful in killing the Zamorin, got the throne. The men engaged in this enticing sport of "king-sticking" were known as amar-khar, to which circumstance, coupled with the above-mentioned Malay term, Colonel Yule ascribes the origin of the common phrase to "run amuck."

Few of us, perhaps, but are aware from personal experience of the meaning of the verb to "chouse," although as a rule the passive is more familiar than the active form. Its origin is amusing. In 1609 Sir Robert Shirley sent a messenger or chiaus (as our old writers call him) to this country as his agent from the Grand Signor and the Sophy to transact some preparatory business. Sir Robert followed him at his leisure as Ambassador from both these Princes, but before he reached England his agent had chiaused the Turkish and Persian merchants here of £4,000 and taken his flight.

Every midshipman in the Royal Navy knows what a "dingy" is, but few would pass a Competitive Examination as to its derivation. Yet the matter is simple enough—when you know it. There is a Bengali word, dingy, signifying a small boat or skiff; hence, when the Portuguese held sway in India they applied the term to their war boats, which were called diagas. In process of time the appellation crossed the seas, and obtained the imprimatur of the Royal Navy of England.

"Verandah" puzzles even Colonel Yule. One derivation is from the Persian word "Barāmadā" (coming forward, projecting); another hazard is the Sanscrit word "Varanda" (a portico), but this apparently satisfactory solution of the difficulty is qualified by the circumstances that "Varanda" is only used in comparatively modern works, and that the term "Veranda" having existed in the earliest narrative of the adventures of the Portuguese in India, it can scarcely be supposed that this nation learned the word for the first time in that country. However, be this as it may, a Colonel Yule of the future—should there be one—must settle a point in regard to which his namesake of to-day confesses himself puzzled.

* "Hobson-Jobson. Being a Glossary of Anglo-Indian Colloquial Words and Phrases, &c." By Colonel Henry Yule, R.E., C.B., LL.D., and the late Arthur Coke Burnell, Ph.D., C.I.E. London: John Murray, Albemarle-street. 1886.

To multiply extracts is needless; enough has been given to show the nature of the book. More than this the reader must do for himself.

We now proceed to the delicate and difficult task of criticism, prefacing our remarks with the observation, that as Colonel Yule says of himself, "only a fool could imagine that he had not fallen into many mistakes, but these when pointed out may be amended."

Ghoul, or "ghūl"—Persian "ghol." In spite of the circumstance that this transliteration is supported by the high authority of Johnson's Dictionary, we make bold enough to assert that in Persia the sound of the "o" is unknown, except in so far as occasionally words borrowed from the Arabic are pronounced the same as in the language from which they are taken. So again Koh-i-nūr seems to us condemnable; it is not even consistent. If "Koh," why not "nor?" In the original the vowel rendered alternately "o" and "ū" is precisely the same. Mār-khōr (snake eater) is still more questionable, seeing that in Persian the word "Khurdan" (to eat), together with all its derivatives, is by a peculiarity of language pronounced as if the long vowel "ū" were short—thus "Khurdan"—and the phrase should be "Mār-khur." In this case Colonel Yule is not supported by Johnson's Dictionary, which gives "Khur." These remarks are in allusion to the Persian of Persia. We are fully aware that in India, where a bastard jargon does duty for the pure dialect of Shiraz, authority can be found for every peculiarity under the sun. We are tempted also to question the soundness of the derivation of the Arabic word "askar" (an army), from the Persian term "laskar"—a theory also supported by the same dictionary; but beyond sound there is little in common between the two words, the former of which has the Arabic "ain" in place of the Persian "Zabar," or short "a." Of course everyone is at liberty to assume what he pleases in the sphere of etymology, where proof is not within the pale of possibility.

Under the head "Likin" a later edition should bring the information up to date. The amount of "duty" is now fixed—at any rate, "on paper."

The origin of the word "Loonghee" is given as possibly the Persian "lunggi." It may be assumed that the duplication of the "g" is a misprint.

Under the head Mosque it is propounded that "Masjid" is literally the place of "Sujūd." It would have been preferable, we think, to have selected the form "Sijdah," but either is possible.

"Mutlab" is said to be derived from the Arabic "talab" (he asked); as the source of the Arabic verb is never less than three syllables, the last of which always terminates with fatha (a), the word should have been written "talaba"; so at page 768 "badal" should be "badala."

A "crore" in Persia is not, as in India, 100 lakhs, = 10,000,000, but 5 lakhs, = 500,000.

"Omedwaur" is taken from "ummedwār" (a hopeful one). Admitted, but there is no "e" in Persian, and in this instance the letter rendered by that vowel should in Roman characters be written either "i," or possibly as a diphthong "ai."

Head "Omlah"; 'umalā should not be written with a long ā—it is either "umala" or "umalat"; and this brings us to a point in regard to which Colonel Yule (p. 625) writes:—"The final 't' in Arabic is generally silent, giving 'sharba' in Persian 'sharbat.'" This is somewhat misleading. What Colonel Yule calls "t" is the "h with two dots above," generally a sign of the feminine nouns in Arabic, in which language its pronunciation is indifferently "h" or "t"; thus "hidāyat" (direction) is equally written "hidāyah" or "hidāya." The same rule applies when the word is adopted into the Persian tongue.

At page 490 "Tamil" and "Tamāl" are both given—of course a mere typographical slip.

The modern spelling of the Persian equivalent of a "scymitar" (page 608) is "shimshir," not "shamshur," a circumstance which makes the derivation hazarded by Colonel Yule more feasible than it would otherwise be.

At page 615 the entry under date 1808 should follow after the explanation "b" regarding "surāhis" instead of preceding it.

Finally, as to the derivation of "rowannah" (page 5-3), we prefer the form "rawān" (going) instead of "rawā," selected by Colonel Yule.

As regards affixes (page 831) a reference to Mr. Wollaston's "English-Persian Dictionary," head "number," would have enabled Colonel Yule to have added materially to his stock of information.

With these few—we admit not particularly important—criticisms, we take leave of a work which, we venture to assert, will stamp its indefatigable author as king in his own line of investigation and in the paths of learned research, while it will assuredly make ignorance as to the topics upon which it touches as unpardonable as it has heretofore been unavoidable.

THE KILIMA-RIJARO EXPEDITION.*

Kilima-rijaro is the name currently given to a mountain range in Eastern Africa, about 175 miles from the Coast. Its highest summit, Kibo, has an altitude of about 19,000 feet, and, although in the Equatorial Zone, is covered at its summit with perpetual snow. This circumstance, which obtains elsewhere only in Central and South America, coupled with the extraordinary range of climates on its slopes, induced the British Association for the Advancement of Science and the Royal Society, acting in concert, to place a sum of £1,000 at the disposal of Mr. H. H. Johnston, for the purpose of visiting the spot and ascertaining the characteristics of the fauna and flora to be found in that region. It is true that Rebmann, a German Missionary, who discovered the snowy dome of Kibo in 1848, and Kraff, who afterwards started for the interior, and reached within forty miles of Kilima-rijaro, had published to the world the results of their remarkable expedition. True, too, that a Hanoverian, Von der Decken by name, in 1861 ascended the latter mountain to a height of 8,000 feet, while in 1873 the Rev. Charles New, and later (in 1883) Mr. Joseph Thomson visited these regions. Still there was much to be learned, at any rate, as regards natural history, to which none of the travellers in question had paid much attention.

So after a month's sojourn at Zanzibar, in order to complete his arrangements, Mr. Johnston, early in 1884, started on his adventurous mission, the sole European of a party of some thirty or more souls—a medley of races, all bad, and differing only in the degree of positive, comparative, and superlative. The first day's tramp brought the usual trouble of the African traveller—want of water—followed by the equally usual revolt of the caravan. However, there was no Court of Criminal Appeal in that country, so justice was summary, and a sound thrashing to one porter brought all the rest to their senses; but it did not solve the difficulty as to absence of drink, and the mission was within "a measurable distance" of collapsing within two days of its start, but a goblet of champagne (alas for teetotalism be it written!) restored vigour to the panting frame of the Chief, and his example spurred on the underlings to second the efforts of their master. So on they pushed till water was found. After this no difficulty was experienced in reaching their goal at Kilima-rijaro, where they pitched their camp and awaited the good pleasure of Mandara, the ruling potentate, who in due course gave Mr. Johnston an interview. The great chieftain happened to be pleased with his new guest. "I like your face," was the verdict upon which hung the fate of the mission. So the wanderer was allowed to "settle in the neighbourhood, and ere long an English homestead, with its cow, its goats, its kid, its garden and vegetables, its milk and honey was founded in the centre of an African encampment. Within a month, too, the breakfast-table was graced with some new-laid eggs, a dish of radishes, a home made loaf, a pat of butter, and a jug of cream!"

But the course of true exploration was not destined to run smooth, for while Mr. Johnston was so tranquilly and innocently pursuing his quiet avocations—skinning birds, drying plants, building houses and cutting roads amidst the ferny glades which surrounded his settlement, wars and rumours of wars were filling the air in close proximity to his peaceful abode. So the white man had to assist his black allies in the work of extermination; but the campaign, so far as the European corps d'armée is concerned, was bloodless, for, thanks to the foresight of the commander of the "pale faces," who had provided himself in Europe with a mysterious box, of which the contents were unknown to any save himself, the enemy were scattered and utterly routed by the simple device of a feu de joie. The natives, who had never seen or heard of fireworks, fancied that the spirits of the unknown world were aiding their foes, and when a rocket rushed into the air, and burst into a mass of stars, as it descended fears came over their trembling limbs, and they fled for their lives to the surrounding jungle.

Nor was this the only trouble they had to encounter, for the Chief of Mosi, who had hitherto befriended the mission, finding that his request for "bakhshish" were after a while refused by Mr. Johnston, as the latter considered that the demands on his resources were becoming too frequent, began to turn rusty to an extent that when even a tiny bird was shot it had to be taken to the Chief as his property. The predicament was alarming, as such hard-and-fast ideas of the rights of kingship, if carried into practice, must of necessity be fatal to the success of the mission; so diplomacy was brought to bear, and after considerable trouble his dusky Majesty was induced to see things in a more favourable light. Once again, then, the Collector's boy was brought into requisition, and all went well. The time had now arrived when the object for which the journey had been undertaken was to be fulfilled, and for the third occasion the heights of Kilima-rijaro were destined to bear the footprints of a white-faced explorer. The summit was, it is true, never reached, for at 16,315 feet above the level of the sea Mr. Johnston, alone and unaided as he was, found it impossible to ascend higher in the midst of the thick clouds and bewildering mists which encircled the majesty of the snow-capped "Kibo." So, perforce, he was compelled to retrace his steps and rejoin his companions, who had pitched their tents some hundreds of feet below the spot to which he had scrambled. The descent, however, was in this instance more troublesome than the ascent, for the party were surrounded on two occasions by hostile tribes; in one instance they escaped destruction by the circumstance that the theodolite which was in use at the time, was taken for an enchanted box, and the natives did not dare raise a finger against persons in charge of the powers of darkness. On the second occasion the mission were permitted to pass unharmed because they had ready wit enough to proclaim that small-pox had broken out amongst them—a pious fraud to which they owed their safety, if not their lives.

So Mr. Johnston reached his "settlement" without injury. A successful traveller, he had accomplished the object of his mission, and it only remained to say good-bye to his friends, and turn his face homewards.

The immediate aim of his journey having been the fauna and flora of the regions through which he traversed, there are, of course, some chapters devoted to these subjects, as also to anthropology and language. But to many readers, especially to those who are seeking "pastures new" for adventure and enterprise, the final remarks on the commercial prospects of Eastern Equatorial Africa will be the most interesting and important part of the work. And what does Mr. Johnston tell them:—"British capitalists, shipowners and manufacturers have lost the spirit of 'merchant adventurers,' and now regard every venture that does not immediately promise interest or preliminary outlay with pardonable timidity. Nevertheless, it seems to me that there are still young energetic men in our country who love a roving life, and who do not shrink from entering the wild regions of Africa because there is no railway to take them. Such as these flock year after year into the unpleasing regions between the Cape Colony and the Zambesi, attracted by the love of sport, or a sheer unreasoning English desire to pry into new countries. Why do not some of them band together, and instead of spending their money, time, and energies on barren Bechuanaland, boldly push into the countries west and north of Kilima-rijaro, trading, shooting and exploring?"

Why, indeed! It can only be said that it will be no fault on the part of Mr. Johnston if they do not do so, for he has written a charming book to attract them. He has told them of a lovely climate and beautiful, more than beautiful, scenery; he has, in short, opened to them a vista of pleasurable enterprise, and to all that way "disposed" we would say read the "Kilima-rijaro Expedition," start for Eastern Africa, and—the reader must fill up the blank according to individual experience of a "personally conducted" tour.

In its latest publications the Society, affectionately known by so many under its initials S. P. C. K., has surpassed itself as to the elegance of the exterior, while by no means falling short of the established quality of the interior, of its books. The Society is wise in its generation. The young, especially, and—in so far as they are permitted, in these Radical days, to remain unsophisticated—the poor, take more kindly to a "dear, pretty, book" than to one of less attractive external appearance.

The little works, which have been sent to us, deal, among other matters, with countries as far apart as Ceylon, and the part of Canada inhabited by those Ojebways, of whom, and of their neighbours, Fenimore Cooper had so many queer stories to relate. "A Peep into Ceylon," a prettily written series of letters from a mother en voyage to her children, contains, besides much solid information, not a few amusing anecdotes, especially one setting forth how the "spicy breezes," which, according to excellent Bishop Heber, are, on board a steamer, produced by rubbing the deck, as the vessel approaches the island, with oil of cloves: an explanation which will, we fear, for ever affect our equanimity when hearing this verse sung in church.

Turning to Canada, we are pleased to find that Mr. Wilson's account of the Church Mission to the Ojebways differs from many missionary narratives in that the writer really seems to have met with a fair share of success. He had, to be sure, no Moollahs or Pandits to deal with, but a simple tribe, to a great extent patriarchal in their habits of life, receptive of new ideas, and anxious to be taught by the "whitefaces." Roman Catholic missionaries on the one hand, and Dissenting preachers on the other, delayed, but did not finally impede, the success of the Church Mission. The narrative is modestly written and nicely illustrated.

"Inasmuch" is the prettily told story of a poor child, the daughter of a drunken mother, whose accidental admission to the flower service, which, originating at St. Mary Cree, in the City, has fortunately become an annual festival at many churches, first led her, and, through her, others, to a knowledge of higher matters than those presented by this sublunary sphere. The tale is very suggestive, and most touching: we know few books of this kind which we should prefer to place in the hands of very young children.

"Through Tumult and Pestilence" is the narrative of the early difficulties of a seemingly ill-assorted couple of humble position (the husband being a stern, though excellent, man, while the wife, the former belle of the village, is given to pleasure). The prosperity which eventually falls to their share, owing to the husband's gallant conduct during the Bristol riots, forms a pleasant, and unexpected, conclusion to a well-written story.

The publications, in our subjoined list, which are more immediately concerned with the influence of religion on daily life, scarcely form subject for comment in our columns: it will be enough to say, as we truly can, that they are conceived (as may be said of the other works on this topic, so far as we know them, to which the S. P. C. K. gives its imprimatur) in a thoroughly liberal spirit, widely differing in tendency from that of the old saying, "Orthodoxy is my doxy: heterodoxy is any other person's doxy." They are, accordingly, even calculated to fulfil the object of such works. These should well aim at attracting, by simple, yet persuasive, plain-speaking: at alluring to brighter worlds, while showing the way.

The Englishman says that the schoolboy of the future, asked to name the typical Asian product of A.D. 1885-86, will probably be taught to reply, "Boundary Commissions." The Franco-Chinese Boundary Commission is busily idle over the frontiers of Tonquin. An Indo-Chinese Boundary Commission will soon be required to settle the limits of Burma. A Russo-Chinese Boundary Commission is just assembling on the confines of Oussouri. The Russo-Afghan Boundary Commission, the Russo-Persian Boundary Commission, and the Beluchistan Boundary Commission complete the tale—as the buffalo said of the tufts at the end. The popularity of this new method of marking our frontiers with pink tape and pillars instead of blood and bones is, no doubt, largely owing to the ease with which the work can be brought up again for revision. When people fought for their frontiers they liked to have long pauses in between; but they are always ready to talk and telegraph. A special department of the public service might be created from the Bunder-in-Chief, who looks after Russia, to the deputy sub-protem joint assistant subordinate Municipal Bunder, who would mark out with lathis the fighting districts of village pariah-dogs. Here is a large sphere for further employment of Native agency.

DEPUTY SURGEON GENERAL BELLEW, C.S., Sanitary Commissioner of the Punjab, who has left Lahore for England on furlough, previous to retirement, has had more to do with politics during his service than sanitation. His father, Captain Bellew, was killed in the disastrous retreat from Cabul in the first Afghan War. He himself entered the Medical Department, and was posted to the Corps of Guides, as Assistant Surgeon, some thirty years ago. Shortly afterwards he was selected by Government to accompany the mission sent to Kandahar, under Colonel Henry Lumsden. The only other Englishman of the party was Lieutenant, now Sir Peter Lumsden; and these three were in Kandahar throughout the Indian Mutiny, in deadly and daily peril of their lives. Dr. Bellew published a valuable account of his experiences in the "Mission to Afghanistan." On the return of the Mission, he rejoined the Guides as Assistant Surgeon, holding a position which offered immense facilities for acquiring a knowledge of the language and customs of the people on our North-West frontier. His Grammar and Dictionary of Pushto, and his report on the Yusafzais, show how enthusiastically these opportunities were seized. In 1868 Dr. Bellew was appointed Civil Surgeon of Peshawar; and a year afterwards he was employed as interpreter to the Ameer Shere Ali, when that potentate paid his memorable visit to Lord Mayo. In 1870 Dr. Bellew was sent in medical charge of the Seistan Mission under Colonel T. R. Pollock; and he has given a very interesting account of the march through Afghanistan to the Persian frontier, and onwards through Persia, in his "From the Indus to the Tigris." In 1873 he was sent with the Forsyth Mission to Yarkund; and whatever results remain of that enterprise are largely due to his industry of research, and intimate familiarity with the manners and languages of the East. The chapters he contributed to the bulky report of the Mission are a perfect mine of information; and the same may be said of the book he published. After the massacre of the ill-fated Cavagnari Mission in Cabul, Dr. Bellew was sent as Political Officer with General Roberts. On the circumstances connected with his work then we have no desire to dwell. It is sufficient to say that Dr. Bellew returned to Civil duty; and has held for some years past the post of Sanitary Commissioner under the Punjab Government.

LORD DUFFERIN AND THE NATIVE PRESS.

ACCORDING to the Native Press, especially that of Lower Bengal, Lord Ripon was the "well-graced actor" who left the Viceregal stage to be followed by one upon whom their eyes are not "bent idly," but maliciously. Lord Dufferin at the present time is being contrasted in the vernacular journals with his predecessor, and the conclusion come to is, of course, against the new Viceroy and in favour of the old. Lord Ripon paved the Bengal Hades with good intentions, now bearing unpleasant results with the thermometer over 100 degrees in the shade. Political agitations are being got up by certain grievance-mongers, mass meetings of the ryots and of the humblest representatives of any industry that can find leisure or profit in declaring discontent with its present condition are being held, and the authorities are in some apprehension that all this restlessness may be followed by some outbreaks of disorder in districts where it is generally very easy to bring about a disturbance between zemindars and ryots or planters and coolies. But because some necessary precautions have been taken, the conductors of the Native Press have come to the conclusion that the Government is swayed by fear and that Lord Dufferin is "anxious." They have given currency to a report that he has petitioned the Secretary of State for India for increased powers in order to put a stop to what they are pleased to call the "political activity" of India. It is stated that he has asked particularly for permission to impose a very stringent gagging Act upon the Native Press. Fear is perhaps father to this thought, for it must be a matter of wonder to the writers themselves that they are allowed to continue to scribble sedition with such impunity, and that the forbearance of the Paramount Power should be so great. The long-suffering British Government must, they think, sooner or later lose patience, and so they are making use of the interval of toleration to "pile on the agony" of words. The Paramount Power knows, however, that the danger, so far as the influence of the vernacular Press extends, is confined to words, and it is therefore inclined to let these pass by it as the idle wind. But, unfortunately, many of these outbursts of "the wounded ego of the awakened mind" (to borrow the latest phrase of classical Babúdom) are being translated for exportation to England, where English agitators pretend to accept them as honest expressions of Native opinion, upon which it is the duty of British philanthropists to moralise, as they condemn the wickedness of British rule in India. Here are a few specimens which have come to hand by the present mail, and will doubtless serve the purpose of one or more of the Indian Delegates and their sympathising Home Rule friends:—

Lord Dufferin's chief aim is to acquire fame in England. He is deaf to the cries of the people of India. He tries to conceal crimes and oppression which the white demons commit on the people of India. He himself does not shrink from injuring India. If any Englishman shows us sympathy Lord Dufferin immediately drives him away from India, without allowing him to utter a single word. By celebrating the Camp of Exercise at Delhi, causing complications in Afghanistan, and imposing the Income-tax, he has embarrassed the people of India very much, and has not shown them a particle of mercy. . . . Lord Dufferin publicly declared that he would nurse and water the seed sown by Lord Ripon. But what has he done? Like Lord Lytton, he has been busy with scientific frontiers and warlike preparations. He has no time to lend ear to our grievances. Lord Lytton celebrated a Durbar at Delhi by wasting a considerable sum of money. Lord Dufferin celebrated a Durbar at Pindi and a Camp of Exercise at Delhi, and caused a profuse waste of money for the same. Lord Lytton declared an unjust war against the Afghans. At the instigation of English merchants, Lord Dufferin annexed Burma to the British Empire. Lord Lytton introduced the License-tax. Lord Dufferin has imposed the Income-tax.

And then follows what is evidently nearest the writer's heart:—

From what we hear, efforts will soon be made to revive Act IX. Some of our contemporaries believe that the sanction of the Secretary of State has been asked for the introduction of a rigorous policy and the destruction of the liberty of the Press. The rayats' meeting will be stopped, and the National League will be suppressed. The Government may try to put a stop to our political enthusiasm, but it will not be successful. . . . What terrible oppression! Lord Dufferin is as stony-hearted as Sir Lepel Griffin is unmerciful.

The allusion to Sir Lepel Griffin is owing to a report which has gone abroad in Calcutta that that official is to be the next Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. This rumour has occasioned a perfect terror in the minds of the Babús, who are the authors or abettors of the safe sedition cultivated in the vernacular Press of that Presidency, for they know that Sir Lepel is a "strong" ruler who has the velvet glove over the iron hand, and who, fully appreciating Native worth, knows how to deal with Native tricks of disloyalty.

That the freedom allowed to the vernacular Press of Bengal must be a difficulty at present in Lord Dufferin's way can hardly be denied. The Home Rule cry is being re-echoed, of course, by the agitators in the East, and remarks like the following are the logical sequences of Mr. Gladstone's latest attempt to dismember the Empire:—

Every word of what Mr. Gladstone said in his speech on the Irish question may appropriately be applied to India. Good laws are not generally made in India. Mr. Gladstone says that good laws are not good unless framed by the Natives of the country. He will not be able to deny that the people of India at this moment ought to be vested with the powers of making laws for their own country. We may be benefited if, after getting rid of the Irish complications, he turns his eyes towards India. . . . In course of time the English will have to grant to India the favour which Mr. Gladstone is going to grant to Ireland, but the people of India will not then consider it as a great favour. For the people in general do not consider any concession a favour that is granted under pressure.

It may be urged that the Native scribes who penned the above do not really understand what they are asking for, and would be the first to repudiate a gift which, could it be granted, would be the signal for the cutting of the throats of the mild Hindus of lower India, by the stronger races of the north. But the foolish words are now being followed up by mass meetings—which are as easy to get together in Bengal as in Trafalgar-square—and at these meetings venial agitators do their best to raise the storm of discontent. What India wants is rest, and this she is not likely to obtain under a system of grandmotherly government. Lord Dufferin requires no extraordinary powers from England to put down mischievous agitators who are trying to serve only their own ends. He has only to use fearlessly and impartially the powers he has, to ensure the approval of all honest opinion in India, Native as well as European.

THE BRITISH BURMA DINNER.

The above annual dinner took place on Monday, the 7th inst., at St. James's Restaurant, when some sixty gentlemen, formerly connected, officially or commercially, with Burma, assembled. The Hon. Sir Ashley Eden was in the chair; Colonel Sladen acted as vice-chairman. Amongst those present were General Blake, lately commanding a Division in British Burma; Mr. Robert Stewart, late member Legislative Council, Calcutta; Mr. W. Strang Steel, of Rangoon; Mr. Garnet Man, Sir Joseph Frayer, and Major-General Barnett Ford, Hon. Sec.

In proposing the toast, "To the memory of the late Sir Arthur Phayre," Mr. Stewart spoke as follows:—

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN,—

The duty, which I rise to discharge, is one which cannot be approached without sorrow and difficulty, but it is one which this assembly would not willingly suffer to be omitted, and it is also a duty, the performance of which carries with it a very mournful satisfaction, for the toast which I am about to submit for your silent and reverent acceptance is the memory of the late Sir Arthur Phayre. Gentlemen, when I came here to-night I felt, and I think many of us must have felt, that, right and fitting as it was that we should meet, and glad as we were to do so, there must yet, on this occasion, for the first time be wanting from amongst us one gracious and much-desired presence, which could never be replaced. I mean, of course, the presence of that dear and honoured friend and President, who had, at all our previous assemblies, occupied the chair, which he filled as none else could have done, and which, indeed, so long as he lived and was able to come amongst us, none else would have desired or consented to fill, for he was recognised by all who came here as our perpetual President, and that not more by right of station and of years; far less by these, than by the higher and better right of the deep respect and affection in which he was held by us all, and by right of the fact that in our common attachment to him we found, for ourselves, a bond of kindness and of friendship. But Sir Arthur is no longer with us, and all we may now do is to think of him as he was, to revere his memory, and to express our thankfulness that we were so long permitted to enjoy the honour of his friendship, the advantages of his labours, and the benefit of his example. It is not my purpose, gentlemen, to detain you this evening by any long or elaborate eulogy of our late President, for that would be as inconsistent with what we know to have been his great modesty and simplicity as it would be foreign to my own feelings and desire; but a brief and temperate estimate of such merits and services as his is surely different from extravagant or elaborate eulogy, and I venture to ask you now to give me a few moments of your time in which I may endeavour, however imperfectly, to recall to your minds what seem to me to have been some of the more remarkable features of his rare and beautiful character. Amongst these I should place, first and foremost, his strong and most impressive individuality; for, in truth, Sir Arthur was no common man, but one who stood out from the ranks, as in all ways fitted for position and for command—fitted for these, alike by his noble presence, by his vigorous intellect, and by his long and most fruitful experience. Then I would ask you to think of his absolute and untiring devotion to duty, of his power of work and of organization, of his loyalty and devotion to the people, whom, for so many years of his life, he ruled, not only wisely and well, but, better and rarer still, with much attachment and acceptance on their part, as well as of the trust and confidence which he reposed in those who served with him and under him. I would ask you to think, too, of his independence, of his modesty, of his dignity, of his wide and catholic sympathy with all men and objects that were good, of the control he had acquired and so uniformly exercised over a temper, by nature strong and perhaps even somewhat impetuous, together with that attractiveness, courtesy, and grace which sat upon him so lightly and so well, and which were, after all, but the just type and faithful reflection of his good and gentle heart. All these gifts and qualities, combined with the other splendid advantages with which Nature had endowed him, invested our late President with a power, an influence, and an authority such as few men have possessed, and such as fewer still have exercised as he did, for objects always unselfish and always worthy. Of Sir Arthur's great work in Burma—that land in which we are all so deeply interested, and our connection with which has brought us together to-night—I intend to say but little, for I feel that speaking to such an audience as this it is not needful, and would, perhaps, hardly be becoming, that I should dilate upon the subject. That work, having undergone the test of time and of the many and important changes which have taken place both in the political and in the economic conditions of the country, still remains to speak for itself; and its strength and solidity, as well as its excellence and utility, have been freely recognised by all who are most competent to judge of it, by none, Sir, more fully and unreservedly than by yourself, our friend's most able and distinguished successor. Sir Arthur was one of those Governors who have found their fitting and appropriate—let me say also their grand and worthy—sphere of action in India, men of whom the Empire is justly proud, for they are men who have been remarkable for nothing so much—not even for their courage and their fearless acceptance of all needful responsibilities—as for their ceaseless care for the interests of the subject-races who have been committed to their charge. His name still lives, and will live on in the hearts of the Burmese people, just as it lives and must for ever remain engraved upon our own. Some of you may remember the epitaph which Macaulay wrote upon the tombstone of Lord Metcalfe, whose splendid yet touching story we Indians know so well; and I refer to it now, because I find there some words which seem to me fitly and rightly to describe the man whose loss we deplore. His position was less considerable, and his range of influence and beneficence was more restricted, than Lord Metcalfe's; but of him, as of the great civilian, it may truly be said that he was, in the words of the prince of essayists and historians, "a statesman tried in many high posts and difficult conjunctures, and found equal to all." I wish to add a word regarding the more personal side of Sir Arthur's character, and it shall be but a word; for I recognise, gentlemen, that you, many of whom knew him well, can justly estimate his private virtues, as well as his public character. Truly, his was a noble and good life, well lived out, even to its sudden end, let us be thankful, its most peaceful and painless close—a life, in the long course of which he had attracted to himself, as he retained to the last, the respect and high regard of all with whom he came in contact; and I can well believe that, to such a man as he was, the knowledge that he was most loved and appreciated by those who had known him longest and best must have been the reward, which next to the verdict of his own conscience, of which he was secure, and the approbation of his Sovereign, of which he had so many proofs, he must most have desired and valued. We shall be agreed in this—that we shall best honour Sir Arthur's memory by keeping constantly before us his example, by learning the lessons which his most worthy life was so well fitted to teach us, and by trying to follow, at a distance, however humble, in his footsteps. I sometimes think of Sir Arthur in the beautiful words of Tennyson, as,

"Thro' all this tract of years

Wearing the white flower of a blameless life;"

and so thinking, I add, still in the matchless language of the Laureate,

"Where is he

Who dares foreshadow for an only son,

A lovelier life, a more unstained than his?"

His life and example are our inheritance—it is for us to use it well. And now, having expressed our sense of the value of that life, and our sorrow and pain that its course on earth is for ever ended, let us drink, with full and appreciative hearts, and in deep and reverential silence, to the dear memory of Sir Arthur Phayre, a man whom we loved while he lived, whom we mourned when he died, and whom we shall never forget.

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.

The number of visitors to this Exhibition for the week ending June 12 was 159,715; total since the opening, 873,569.

The Times of this morning, in noticing the exhibits of the Economic Court, calls attention to the importance of the Department of Revenue and Commerce, paying well deserved compliment to its head, Mr. E. C. Buck, and especially to Dr. George Watt, whose able and energetic labours deserve fuller public recognition than they have yet received:—

This department is of comparatively recent creation, but it is one on the efficient working of which depends almost entirely the future development of Indian industries. The present chief of the Department of Revenue and Agriculture, as it is called, is Mr. E. C. Buck, whose duty it was to superintend the collection of the exhibits now on view at South Kensington, and who, being home on furlough, has, in a somewhat informal manner, been placed on the Commission. Mr. Buck was most efficiently supported by the officials in each province who had to make in nine months the art ware collections, and their work deserves prominent recognition. In the meantime we can only mention the names of Mr. Griffiths, Bombay; Mr. Kipling, Punjab; Colonel Pitcher, North-West Provinces; and Dr. Handley Jeypur. It seems a pity that some arrangement could not have been made whereby these gentlemen would have accompanied the collections they have made with so much trouble and so much intelligence. In collecting and arranging materials for the Economic Court, Mr. Buck had the able assistance of Dr. George Watt, to whose energy, accurate and wide knowledge, and exceptional power of organisation the success of this court is almost entirely due. Dr. Watt properly belongs to the Educational Department of Bengal, to which he went out as Professor of Botany when Sir George Campbell was Lieutenant-Governor. Meantime he is temporarily attached to the department of which Mr. Buck is chief.

When Lord Mayo was Viceroy of India he founded a Department of Revenue and Agriculture, which, after being in existence for five years, was broken up on financial grounds. Two or three years later the Secretary of State for India sent out, at the bidding of Parliament, a Famine Commission, of which Sir James (then Mr.) Caird was president. That Commission decided that one of the most important needs of the country was a department of the very kind which Lord Mayo had established, and accordingly the Department of Revenue and Agriculture was re-instituted in 1881, and Mr. Buck was placed at its head.

The main duty of the department was to collect, collate, and disseminate information as to the condition of India in its agricultural aspects; and during the last five years efforts have been successfully made, by a few simple modifications and improvements in the provincial establishments, to arrange for the annual submission to headquarters of facts and statistics in an intelligible form. The machinery already existed in every village, and it only required organization, at no serious increase of expenditure, to make it produce results of the highest importance as regards agriculture.

But facts and statistics regarding the great bulk of economic products, not agricultural, which were equally called for by the Famine Commission, were left untouched; and, moreover, scientific knowledge regarding agricultural products was also lamentably deficient. In January, 1883, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal proposed an exhibition to be held in Calcutta in the following year, and Mr. Buck was charged with the formation of a collection of products from all India. Mr. Buck agreed to do so only on condition that the Bengal Government would lend him Dr. Watt, whose exceptional qualifications for work in connection with the new department had become known. Fortunately, at the same time Sir Joseph Hooker, as Director of Kew Gardens, in which Dr. Watt had worked for some time to acquire a mastery of economic botany, pressed for his employment in work of the character for which he was sent to India. Dr. Watt, fortunately, was lent, and began the work for the Calcutta Exhibition which he has been doing in London for the Indian Court at South Kensington. Again, when in 1884 the Prince of Wales asked the Government of India to contribute to the London Exhibition, the responsibility fell on Mr. Buck's department, and again he asked for and obtained Dr. Watt's very valuable assistance.

But surely these makeshifts in a department of such vital importance are highly unsatisfactory. The work which Dr. Watt has shown himself capable of doing, and actually has done, must lie at the very root of the efficiency of such a department. It has only been due to the accidents of the two exhibitions, it seems, that an economic specialist has had anything to do with the department at all; and we cannot understand how it is that Mr. Buck's request for a permanent appointment of this kind has met with no response. We have already referred to Dr. Watt's great dictionary of the economic products of India; but during his comparatively short career in India much other work has come from his hands. Indeed, the number and value of the publications of the new department are astonishing. The latest of these is a statistical atlas of India, in which a vast amount of varied information is summarised in graphic charts and accompanying text. This atlas will be continued and enlarged, and will form a storehouse of information on our Indian Empire in all its aspects. But the work of this department has only begun, and if Dr. Watt's labours in connection therewith are to cease in March next the department will be seriously crippled. So far, all that has been secured is a basis for future investigation. All that has been done has been to collate existing knowledge, and that is a great deal; but the further the work is carried the greater is found to be our ignorance and the need that exists for future inquiry. To send a man of Dr. Watt's special qualifications back to teach small native boys how to add up sums would be a lamentable waste of power. The work of investigation of Mr. Buck's department would come to an abrupt end. The matter virtually rests with the India Office. The authorities in that department have it in their power to ascertain for themselves the value of the work being carried out by Dr. Watt, under Mr. Buck's superintendence, for the effectual development of the vast resources of a country which is capable of producing almost anything that will grow under the sun.

A CURIOUS LETTER.—The following letter has been addressed to the editor of the Indian Daily News:—"Ten of us, Europeans, have, owing to the total ignoring of the unemployed by Government, decided upon embracing the Mahomedan faith, as we have been promised a livelihood together with employment; but the question now arises that eight out of this number are Volunteers, some of old standing. Do we still retain our places in the ranks, or must we resign."

Correspondence.

THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—Permit me to recall the attention of the English public to the strategical importance of the railway between Bhosawul and Khundwa—seventy-seven miles.

The Report of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company has been issued, and will be placed before the proprietors next Friday.

In para. 13 Colonel James Holland, the chairman, states that the detailed estimates for doubling the line are now all before Government.

The doubling of the line will not prevent its being washed away by the Bookri and Ajunta mountain torrents during the heavy rains in July, neither will it prevent interruption of communication between Bombay and Calcutta by Tania Bheel and other dacoits.

What is required is an alternative line to be constructed by the Indian Government from Nagpoor to Jubulpoor, as recommended by General Viscount Wolseley, G.C.B.—Your obedient servant,

June 11th.

OBITUARY.

THERE are many Anglo-Indians and Natives who will regret to hear of the death of Sir George Welsh Kellner, C.S.I., K.C.M.G., which took place on Thursday last at his residence in Bayswater, at the age of sixty-one years. Entering the Uncovenanted Civil Service of India in a very junior grade, he won his way to some of the very highest appointments in that country. He held the post of Inspector-General of Accounts, and afterwards that of Military Accountant-General. On his retirement from India Lord Beaconsfield appointed him Financial Commissioner in Cyprus, and the office which he held at the time of his death, viz., that of Paymaster-General of the Chancery Court, was given to him by Mr. Gladstone. In India he was in the confidence of the several Viceroy, from Lord Canning to Lord Northbrook, who all bore willing testimony to the able and conscientious way in which he discharged the often difficult and delicate duties entrusted to him. A modest, genial man, he made friends in every circle and an enemy in none.

THE Indigo Planters' Gazette says :—"Another cause célèbre, which will take the shine out of the Statesman libel case, is on the tapis. Mr. Arthur Tyton Blakiston, of the Jaintpore Concern versus the Mozufferpore Planters' Club Committee, for removing his name from the list of members on account of an unpaid balance of two annas six pies. The damages are laid at half a lakh ; the Gasper has been retained, and plaintiff is negotiating his passage home, as he intends retiring from India's coral strand after the verdict, and going into the Irish Parliament."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

BRIGADE-SURGEON T. N. HOYSTER, Medical Staff, expects to leave India shortly on promotion.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL WILLIAM KEOUGH has been appointed to the command of the 1st Battalion Suffolk Regiment.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL C. B. LEMESURIER, Royal Artillery, has been posted temporarily to the command of the Presidency District.

EIGHT members of the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles have been entered this year for the Alexandra and Queen's competitions at Wimbledon.

THE Fourteenth Central Rifle Meeting of the Bombay Presidency will commence at Poona on the 5th October next.

LIEUTENANT H. A. K. JENNINGS, Royal Artillery, Small Arms' Ammunition Factory, Kirkee, has been granted ninety days' leave to visit England.

LIEUTENANT L. G. OLIVER, 2nd Battalion Middlesex Regiment, has been appointed Adjutant of the Coorg Volunteer Rifle Corps.

LIEUT.-COLONEL AND BREVET-COLONEL H. J. THORNTON, Royal (late Madras) Artillery, unemployed list, has been permitted to proceed to England at the public expense.

LIEUT.-COLONEL A. MORRIS, 4th Battalion 60th King's Royal Rifle Corps, has been granted six months' leave to England on medical certificate.

COLONEL J. HAYWOOD, 2nd Battalion Gloucestershire Regiment, will complete five years' service as a Regimental Colonel on the 31st instant, and will vacate the command of the Battalion.

It is reported that proposals have been laid before Government by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India for the inauguration of rifle meetings in the Bengal Presidency, after the model of the Bombay Presidency and Southern India Rifle Meetings, where a certain number of picked shots from each corps of the regular army, European and Native, and volunteers, can be brought together at the public expense for prize firing; but doubts are entertained whether the present tightness in the public purse will allow of the meetings being held this year, more especially as a certain amount of diplomacy will be required to talk over the Council of the Northern India Rifle Association and get them to throw in their lot with the army meetings; otherwise, whichever is held first will seriously interfere with the prosperity of the other meeting. Perhaps some arrangement is feasible by which the integrity of the N. I. R. A. can be maintained, without in any way interfering with its present scope and management. At all events, it would be well to try to retain it.

The failure of the native shoe as a footpiece for infantry, which was demonstrated so undeniably at the Camp of Exercise, has led many officers to turn their attention to the devising of something better. Amongst others is Colonel C. W. Babington, of the 3rd Bengal Infantry, who has just published a little pamphlet on the subject. To give the native soldier the ordinary ammunition boot is not the way out of the difficulty. It is heavier than anything he is accustomed to, and harder, and is only meant to be worn with socks, without which it blisters even a native's foot. What Colonel Babington proposes is simply to take the ordinary Hindustani or Punjabi shoe and add an ankle piece to it after the fashion of an English shooting boot, and lacing up in the same manner. This, he believes, would answer all purposes, and the illustration given in the pamphlet certainly looks well enough. The price is put at Rs. 1-3 the pair, and it only remains to try the new boot by the crucial test of practice.

APPLICATION having been made by telegram for the services of six young medical officers, nine apothecaries, and twelve hospital assistants for service in Upper Burma, the Surgeon-General, H.M.'s Forces, regretted that he was not in a position to meet this demand, and suggested that, as the force in Upper Burma did not solely consist of Madras troops, this demand might be met from Bengal. The Government of India, the Madras Times learns, have informed him that the medical administration of Upper Burma shall be vested in the Surgeon-General, H.M.'s Forces, Madras, who will meet all requirements, with assistance from Bengal and Bombay, in communication with the Surgeon-General of those Presidencies.

THE BEHAR LIGHT HORSE AND THEIR LATE ADJUTANT.—Recently Major Vousden, the late Adjutant of the Behar Light Horse, received an invitation to attend certain festivities of the Behar Light Horse at Mozufferpore, and was formally presented, at a mess dinner, with a Wilkinson's cavalry sword and a magnificent photograph album, set with onyx stone and ornamented with silver regimental devices. Both articles bear an inscription in silver:—"Major W. Vousden, Victoria Cross, 5th Punjab Cavalry, from his old friends the Behar Light Horse: Land of the Leal."

A CALCUTTA paper says that the list of honours to be distributed on the Queen's birthday will be found to include a C.S.I. to Lord William Beresford.

TRADE OF INDIA.

The statement of the trade of British India for the year ended March 31 last, just issued, shows that amid almost universal depression the decline of trade in India last year was small.

India's trade with England, it is stated, is more than half her whole trade with the world. Last year the proportion to the whole was a little smaller (under 1 per cent.) than in 1883-84, but was about the same as in 1882-83. "The other half of India's trade is so spread over a large number of countries that not one of them anything like approaches the proportion of the trade with England. China takes the largest share next after England, the proportion being under 11 per cent. for Hong Kong and the Treaty Ports combined. The trade with France does not represent 6 per cent. of our whole trade, being but little more than a tenth of the trade with England. Producing little of the descriptions of goods mainly required by India, while India's staple exports are weighted with heavy taxation in France, the trade with that country offers but little prospect of development. The Straits Settlements come next with under 3½ per cent. of our whole trade, the proportion reaching this sum in consequence of the considerable export of opium to that colony. The United States follow with about 3 per cent. of our trade, then Italy with 2.65 per cent., Belgium with 2.21 per cent., and Ceylon with 2.14 per cent. And then follow a great many other countries with a still smaller share of our trade. It will be evident at once from the figures here set forth that the main artery of Indian commerce connects this country with the United Kingdom, and that there is but one smaller vessel of any importance connecting India with China. The flow of trade with other countries, in comparison with that between England and India, is of little consequence. Our direct trade with France, for instance, which has a larger trade with us than any two other European countries combined, might altogether cease in any year or be doubled without producing any very material effect on the aggregate volume of our trade; but a diminution of even one-tenth in the dimensions of our trade with England would produce as much effect as the total cessation of our trade with France. It is of great importance, of course, that India should cultivate as close and extended commercial relations with other countries as circumstances will admit. But there is no question of the immense advantage that England possesses in being the one country which extensively manufacture goods adapted to the requirements of the people of this country, as well as the one country whose fiscal policy does not discourage the consumption by her own people of most Indian products. As long as other countries are unable to give us the cottons and woollens, the metals, machinery, coal, and railway material which form the bulk of our requirements, and as long as they maintain a protective system which heavily taxes many of the most important of our Indian exports, so long will England continue to take a share of the trade of India in comparison with which their share will be but trifling. As matters stand, while England alone has more than 55 per cent. of our trade, all the rest of Europe, with Egypt and the United States put together, have only about 19 per cent.

THE decision that military officers shall be assessed the Income Tax on all sums received by them from private sources in India will, the Lahore paper thinks, give rise to considerable heart-burning and unpleasantness. The defining section of the Act says distinctly that "Income means income and profits accruing and arising or received in British India;" and therefore, till the Act is amended, or the Governor-General in Council exercises his prerogative of excusing military officers as a class, there is nothing to be done but to assess them on such moneys as they may receive from home, even though these moneys may have paid income tax there also. It falls rather hard on the subaltern whose "allowance" is the one thing that keeps him from going utterly to the bad, and allows him to indulge withal in an extra polo pony, or even a decent pig-sticker. Such allowance really more resembles pocket money at school than the euphonious "income arising, accruing, or received in British India."

"STAFF CORPS" writes to the Pioneer:—"I shall be gratefully obliged if any one well acquainted with the Furlough Rules of 1868, and the Regulations regarding pensions, will kindly answer these questions for me. I shall be under the greatest obligation to him. A, whose commission dates 18th December, 1861, lands in India on the 24th October, 1862, joins the Staff Corps in 1867, and up to the 1st November, 1881, has taken two years and 100 days' furlough on medical certificate, viz. :—

6th June, 1868, to 21st March, 1869	... 288
8th May, 1880, to 1st November, 1881	... 1-177

(1) What furlough is due to him on the 1st May, 1887? Of course he can avail himself of two years of it only at a time? (2) When can he retire on the pension of £700 after thirty-two years' service? How much of this service must be in India, and what portion of furlough to count towards service? (3) Will he receive the £700 pension in pounds sterling in England, without any loss by exchange?

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION
TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

1, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Established 1834, by Special Act of Parliament.
Subscribed Capital, £500,000.

DIRECTORS.

JOHN FARLEY LEITH, Esq., Q.C., Chairman. | W. N. NICHOLSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

ANNUAL BONUS POLICIES. THEIR SPECIAL ADVANTAGES.

I.—Economy of Premium at Outset of Assurance.

The Premium charged by the "UNIVERSAL" on the Policy being effected, and irrespective of reductions by Cash Bonus annually after six payments, has always been from 5 to 10 per cent. lower than the average scale of Premiums charged by such few other Life Offices that divide Bonuses every year. The rates of the "UNIVERSAL" are also more economical than those of the average of Offices declaring Bonuses only once every five years.

II.—Low Rates of Premium Reduced by Annual Cash Bonus.

The practice of an Annual Division of Profits has long been considered by leading authorities to be the most just and regular that can be adopted. Its success in the case of the "UNIVERSAL" has been shown in more than half a century's experience, by enabling returns of Premium to be made to the assured averaging upwards of 45 per cent. of the original rates charged, thus practically reducing the average outlay for the Policy to 55 per cent. or 11s. in the pound, of the contract rates stipulated to be paid.

III.—Large Reversionary Bonuses Annually Added.

The sum allotted to each Policy at the Yearly Division of Profits may be applied either in reduction of the current year's Premium, or in annual augmentation of the amount assured, by the addition to the Policy of such Reversionary Bonus as each year's return of premium will assure as a Single Premium at the then age.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. BROWNE is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This system is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE is the sole proprietor in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he admitted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY, GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON. REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

TO J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 39 St. Russell St., W.C.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cures short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria. IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. J. T. ## THE BROAD ARROW AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE.
ESTABLISHED 1833.
EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on especially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service
Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies.
It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in Eng and regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SATURDAY, JUNE 19, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 1st June; from Allahabad to the 30th May; and from Calcutta, Madras, and Ceylon to the 29th May.

We have received from the India Office the following:—

“From Viceroy, June 18.

“Following casualties in affair with dacoits at Salen, June 12: Captain William George Dunsford killed, shot through the head; No. 327, Private Arnold, died of heat, apoplexy; No. 2,499, Private Cooper, No. 680, Private Terry, both wounded severely; No. 662, Lance-Corporal Leaver, wounded slightly; No. 139, Lance-Sergeant Fox, dangerously. All of 2nd Battalion Liverpool Regiment.”

MONDAY, the birthday of the Queen-Empress, was of course observed as a general holiday throughout the Empire; but at Simla, as the news of General Hughes's death became generally known in the afternoon, a gloom was cast over the station. In the evening the Viceroy held the birthday levée at the Viceregal lodge, at which the Commander-in-Chief and personal staff appeared with the usual sign of military mourning.

GENERAL HUGHES was buried with due military honours at Simla on the 25th May; the Viceroy, the Commander-in-Chief, the Members of Council, and nearly all the Military and Civil Officers at Simla, attended.

COLONEL NEWMARCH will officiate as Military Member of Council until a successor to General Hughes is appointed from England, and Colonel Collen will act as Military Secretary to the Government of India in the absence of Colonel Newmarch.

At an early meeting of the Viceregal Council next month the Oudh Rent Law Amendment Bill, which was introduced in Calcutta, will be referred to a Select Committee. Rana Shankar Baksh, President of the Oudh Talukdars' Association, who has just been appointed to the Council in the place of Raja Amir Hassan, who is still in ill-health, will take his seat whenever the Bill comes on for discussion. Two meetings of the Executive Council were held last week, there being just now a pressure of urgent business, in connection principally with the exchange question.

THERE is no news of importance from Upper Burma. The work of pacification seems to have made favourable progress during the past few days.

It is under contemplation to station a battalion at Manipore, with a view to secure a base from which to open out the country from Tummu to Bhamo.

THERE is a growing belief in Upper Burma that more cavalry are needed to ensure the thorough dispersal of the dacoit bands, and reference will probably be shortly made to the Government of India on this point.

It is expected that the Tibet Mission will be ready to start by the 3rd proximo.

THE latest news from Tibet shows that recent rumours of intended obstruction to the progress of the Mission were probably untrustworthy. It is now said that the Chinese Ampa, or official representative, at Lhasa, has sent a deputation to meet Mr. Macaulay at or near the frontier.

THE Indian portion of the Afghan Boundary Commission hope to be back in India by August.

THE Joint Boundary Commission were to leave Andkhui on Tuesday last to complete the last section of the Afghan frontier to the Oxus. The sickness which had been so prevalent in the country after the recent inundations has become less severe. Mr. Griesbach, who had fallen sick on the Bamian road, is reported better, and rejoins Sir Joseph Ridgeway's party at Andkhui.

RUMOURS are current in the Peshawar bazaar of the death of the Amir of Cabul. The statement is believed to be untrue, though Abdir Rahman is said to be again ill.

THERE has been a cyclone in the Indian Ocean, and several vessels which had left Bombay have had to put back owing to stress of weather.

THE temperature has been very high at several stations up-country. At Jacobabad on Friday the thermometer registered 122 degrees in the shade.

SEVERE weather has been experienced in the Bay of Bengal, and several shipping casualties are reported.

COLONEL BEN WILLIAMS, accompanied by Veterinary Surgeon Raymond, of the 6th Dragoon Guards, has left India for Persia, on special remount duty.

CAPTAIN GORDON, in charge of the Reserve Depot at Saharanpur, will officiate as Director of Army Remount Operations, during Colonel Ben Williams' absence on special duty in Persia.

COLONEL CLIFFORD succeeds Colonel Low as head of the Transport Department, but will not come out from home to take up the appointment till the cold weather.

It is understood that Brigadier-General A. Johnson will shortly be appointed Inspector-General of Artillery in India.

IN connection with the disturbances in Manipore, due to the contested succession, steps have been taken to preserve peace on the frontier.

THE MAHARAJAH SCINDHIA is in a critical state of health.

MR. MORGAN, Assistant Engineer, Midland Railway, who only arrived in India three months ago, has died at Gwalior from heat apoplexy.

At the birthday banquet at Government House, on May 24, Mr. Grant Duff delivered an address on the affairs of the Empire.

REFERRING to Home politics he said:—"Alas! he must be indeed very sanguine who does not now see that the evils which affect the body politic in the far Atlantic Islands lie far too deep to be cured by the triumph either of this party or that, and that the destinies have been of late impartially irresponsible to the prayers of all occupants of Downing-street. Ever since we were last gathered to celebrate the birthday of the Sovereign, the moral gloom which was resting over England has gone on deepening.

It is rumoured in Madras that Mr. Grant Duff has resigned the Governorship of that Presidency to mark his disapproval of Mr. Gladstone's proposed legislation for Ireland, but that he has been requested by the Secretary of State to retain his office until the termination of the usual quinquennial term.

SIR AUCLAND COLVIN, speaking at Simla on the occasion of a lecture on bi-metallism, by Mr. G. L. Molesworth, said:—"We are agreed with the Government of India of the necessity of improving the position of silver, but, unfortunately, we are not sufficiently agreed as to the fact that the commerce of this country is prejudiced by the depreciation of the metal."

A GOOD deal of practical inconvenience has been caused in Bombay by a strike of gharrywallahs, who object to wearing the uniform prescribed by the Commissioner of Police as being degrading.

THE HON. C. P. ILBERT proposes to introduce a Bill in the Supreme Legislative Council on the lines of the English Bills of Sale Act.

THREE hundred Ladakhis have arrived at Jammu to complain to the Maharajah of the oppression practised upon them by the Wazeer.

THE net Indian sea and land customs revenue, exclusive of the salt revenue, for April amounted to Rs. 12,81,000, or nearly the same as last year.

THE case of Colonel Hooper, late Provost Marshal at Mandalay, has been minuted upon by the Viceroy, and will probably now be sent home for final disposal by the Secretary of State.

THE income of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce from all sources in 1855 amounted to Rs. 32,371. There was a balance of Rs. 4,708 in hand at the end of the year.

IN the five years 1880-81 to 1884-85 82,127 emigrants left British India, and, 29,409 returned.

THE jute and gunny bag godowns of the Wellington Mill at Serampore have been almost destroyed by fire. The damage is estimated at two lakhs.

VISCOUNT CLANDEBOYE has returned to Simla from his trip to Kashmere, and resumed his duties on the Viceregal Staff.

Notes of the Week.

THE Times publishes a telegram dated Simla, June 15, to the effect that the Finance Committee sitting there has recommended the permanent localisation of the Government offices at Simla on the ground of economy.

IT is announced in the gossip of the newspapers that according to present arrangements H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught will sail from London for Bombay in the P. and O. steamer Bengal on 2nd September next. It is rather early for reporters of news to make coming events so certain. According to other rumours his Royal Highness's services may be required nearer home, and it is possible that he does not return to India this year, if at all.

IT would be interesting to learn for what purpose telegrams are so often sent to the Calcutta and Bombay papers telling of disasters to English enterprises or officials beyond the frontier. Surely the editors of those papers ought to know their correspondents or be able to gauge in some way the value of the information sent. A Calcutta paper gave prominence a few days ago to a report that Colonel Lockhart's mission had been seized and imprisoned in Badakshan. This was telegraphed to London, and of course caused some uneasiness. A telegram from the Government of India, dated Simla, June 17 states that according to the latest official information received there from Colonel Lockhart his mission was proceeding from Bar Panjab to Zebak, whence Colonel Lockhart proposed to march through Badakshan or return to Chitral by way of the Dorah Pass through the Hindu Kush range as circumstances might require. The mission had been temporarily detained at Bar Panjab arranging for supplies.

ALL sorts of disquieting rumours have also been circulated regarding the prospects of the Thibet mission and the obstruction which it was prophesied it would certainly meet with. The latest accounts show that the Chinese authorities at Llassa have sent a deputation to meet Mr. Macaulay at or near the frontier.

THE questions connected with the cases of the Bombay-Burma Trading Corporation in Upper Burma are likely to be referred for final decision to the Secretary of State. The Government of India are desirous of doing impartial justice to all parties concerned in the matter, that is, both the Corporation and the public, to whose interests they have of course to pay special regard. Some form of settlement which shall neither allow unrestricted monopoly to the Corporation, nor completely cancel their arrangements with the late Burmese Government, will probably be the outcome of the Government policy. The whole subject is at present engaging the careful attention of the Supreme Government.

ACCORDING to a correspondent of one Calcutta paper the Simla Municipality have spent five lakhs of rupees in a somewhat original manner, although it is a little strong to say of a body, which counts some bankers and political economists amongst its advisers, that it is "as incapable of making a wise use of money as a cow of handling a musket." According to the correspondent this is how the money has gone:—

The five lakhs for sanitary improvements were made over to the Simla Municipality, but that "poor feckless body" was as incapable of making a wise use of the money as a cow of handling a musket. Their idea of sanitary improvements lies in the direction of providing a public place of amusement on the Ridge for the special use of "persons on the Government House visiting list," and of erecting lamp-posts from the Viceregal Lodge to the theatre—lamps only to be lit when the leaders of Simla society were about. The building on the Ridge is likely to prove their ruin, but the poor Municipal Commissioners are endeavouring to "raise the wind" by taxing everything and every living creature—puppy dogs, ducks, fowls, jinrickshaws, jhampanis, servants, visitors, and even the official lords of creation. In the dustiest and most exposed spots hard wooden benches have been provided for the tired wayfarer, the railings along the roads have been newly-painted for the express purpose of soiling our continuations, and the Committee propose to spend a good portion of the money obtained by increased taxation in employing Signor Rosetti, of the Volunteer Band, to teach the tonga drivers to play popular airs on their bugles.

OUR military contemporary, the Broad Arrow, commenting this morning on the latest news about the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, says:—

The Maharajah Dhulip Singh is evidently more satisfied with Aden than the Irish soldier to whose musical ear the pronunciation of the name suggested the paradise of Eden, and who, after a week's experience of the place, told the chaplain that he quite understood why Adam and Eve had committed a crime in order to get transported from it. The Maharajah prefers to remain there and brood over his sorrows, not the least of which is that his warlike countrymen, to whose passionate feelings he appealed, have met his overtures with coldness or disdain. The Sikh soldier has been true to his salt since the day he entered the British service, and he will continue to remain so while he is paid punctually and gets occasional fighting with a chance of loot. He has no desire to fly the Khalsa banner again on his own account or on that of anybody else's. It was a foolish impulse which led Dhulip Singh to attempt to stir strife in the Punjab, but we are informed that the whole question of the relationship between the British Government and himself is again under official consideration, and that a "blue book" will shortly be issued for public information, the result of which will possibly be a satisfactory settlement of a difficult and delicate case.

WE believe that this information regarding the coming Blue-Book to be correct. But it is to be hoped that there will not be found in it a justification of the action of the British Government on the grounds put by another writer in the home press that as the "Lion of the Punjab" stole from others the greater portion of the property he was possessed of, the British Lion only followed Native approved custom in stealing it from his son.

"MIXED" blessings are not always gratefully received or understood, but "mixed thanksgivings" are more uncommon. The Hindu inhabitants of certain wards in Calcutta indulged, however, in one on the Queen's birthday, when a sacred procession took place by way of "thanksgiving to God for the abandonment by the Municipality of the scheme of establishing slaughter-houses in the town; and in commemoration of the birthday of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Empress of India, under whose benign reign the Hindus enjoy perfect immunity from interference with their religion."

THE TELEPHONE IN THE ZENANA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Is it not possible, asks a correspondent of one of the Calcutta journals, to counteract the influence of caste by gentle and unobtrusive means? Most certainly it is; but the question arises, what means may be fairly considered gentle and unobtrusive? The tide of cheap education is slowly and noiselessly undermining the barriers between class and class. The wild surge of a local autonomy that casts up the broker, the bunnia, and the Brahmin on the one civic bench together, tends towards the same end; but the work is necessarily laborious, and impatient spirits would gladly see its completion hastened. Neither education nor local autonomy appreciably affect the zenana: but the correspondent thinks that where art has failed science may step in, and the purdanishin be enabled to converse with her friends and neighbours through the telephone! The inspiration is a brilliant one; but dare the correspondent affirm that the telephone is either "gentle or unobtrusive," or a thing in any way fitted for the peace and seclusion of a Hindoo family? Conceive the disastrous effect on dames who "never saw the sun shine or the winds blowing"—as one of the songs of '58 has it, if a "devil cage" with wire strings attached were nailed to the wall of their room, and a shrill-voiced bell, moved by no visible agency, began to ring petulantly after the manner of telephones. Is there any lady who would remain for one second in a chamber so manifestly given over to the Evil One? Or, if her courage sustained her thus far, and with trembling hands she lifted the unclean horn trumpet to her ear, would not the first sound of a sepulchral voice from the mysterious outer world drive her to join her affrighted sisters on the roof-top, until the family priest arrived to exorcise the fiend by plugging up the communication tap? Admitting even that desperate alarm would give place to curiosity, and eventually to deep interest, we are brought face to face with a more difficult problem. Who is to talk to whom? Will the telephones be hung up in the Post-office that the Lotharios of Jaun Bazar may murmur soft nothings to the beauties of Sealdah with none to check—for, be it remembered, two cannot listen at one telephone? Purdanishins may, under certain circumstances, visit purdanishins and exchange with them the gossip of their respective households. What more does an enlightened nation require? Let them trust, as does Professor Wordsworth, to the operation of the Time Spirit rather than that of the telephone, which is an instrument devised by the West for the West and not to be lightly played with. The beginning of any ill-considered trifling in this direction will be hysterics; and the end thereof discontent.

INDIAN CARPETS.

(Statesman.)

If the public should be persuaded to endorse the views of Mr. Vincent Robinson, communicated in a paper read at a recent meeting of the Society of Arts on Indian jail carpets, this branch of Native industry would seem to be doomed. Its fate has for years past been hanging in the balance, but the final blow was reserved for a member of the Society to deal. The fault, it appears, does not lie in their wear as carpets, but from their being "absolutely vile in colouring," which does not come up to the ideal of Mr. Robinson and his confrères, who hoped to find in the jail manufactures a "poem in wool" instead of a materialistic product of everyday use, devoid of sentiment or imagination. We have no room to reproduce the opinion of the savants, as to what the typical carpet ought to be, from an æsthetic point of view, but Sir George Birdwood has arrived at the conclusion that "it was perfectly awful to note the degeneration that had taken place in the artistic qualities of Indian carpets in recent years." The secret, however, is not that there is a decline in native taste, but that there is a deterioration in colour, due to Western inventions, which, while furnishing improvements on the primitive methods of India, supply unfortunately cheap and nasty substitutes. And so Indian processes are "improved" by aniline dyes, the result being a hybrid production, with the absence of that effective arrangement of colours for which our Indian carpets have been famous from time immemorial. The bad name now given to them by the connoisseurs in authority will have the effect of placing them at a discount in the present Indo-Colonial Exhibition, and every pretender who passes himself off as an art critic, following in the wake of the savants, will denounce the products of our jails and schools of art as beneath the notice of a discerning public.

It is complained, we observe in the home papers, that too great prominence has been given at the Exhibition to the jail carpet and the school of art pottery, and that the result is likely to be a one-sided and misleading representation of Indian industries.

"The unsophisticated Indian carpet-weaver is not yet quite extinguished, but he will be nowhere in the Exhibition, as compared with his subsidised criminal competitors. The native potter, as ancient as he whom Ezekiel interviewed, is still extant, but he will be elbowed out of the Exhibition by those Government Schools of Art which are themselves a projection from and parasites of South Kensington. These instances of disproportion will not strike the general public; but it may be well that the few close observers who desire to trace the history of handicrafts should be forewarned that, in some notable respects, the indigenous arts of India may be conspicuous only by their absence."

We are certainly surprised at these remarks, as Sir George Birdwood's influence might have been expected perhaps to hold the tendencies thus spoken of in effectual check, so enthusiastic an admirer as he is of native art, pure and undefiled.

TEA INVESTMENTS:—CEYLON v. ASSAM.

(Ceylon Observer.)

A correspondent interested in Ceylon writes to us that he lately met at home a gentleman who has extensive interests in tea-planting in Assam, with whom he discussed the relative position of the Indian and our island districts in respect to the prospect the former affords of successful competition in the matter of tea-growing. As regards quality, there appears to be no doubt but that Assam—at least on certain gardens—is fully able to hold her own; but it was acknowledged by the authority referred to that the good qualities, and, in fact, the present average of tea crops of Assam can only be produced at such a cost that Ceylon teas must ultimately oust a large proportion of them from the London market. Indeed, he seemed to think that, as a paying industry, tea-planting in Assam must in a few years begin to go down before the increasing and more cheaply produced crops of Ceylon, and he talked of investing in this colony so as to be prepared for the evil days which he foresees. It may be that this is a rather pessimist view to hold; but it is evidently shared by many who are engaged in tea-planting in the Northern districts of India. As we have often said, the greatest praise of the tea districts of Ceylon and of their probable future has come to us from the mouths of visitors who are acquainted with "tea" in India.

In support of the opinions so formed, our visitors generally refer to the advantages possessed by Ceylon. They assert that the more equable distribution of rainfall which this island enjoys is not alone more favourable to the growth of the plant and the development of its leaf, but must enable more frequent pluckings to be made, and that, too, at seasons when the leaf is in its most approved condition. Secondly, they advert to the great advantage available to Ceylon planters in its labour supply. One authority declares Assam quite unable to compete with Ceylon in this particular, and he can see no hope of the adverse balance being redressed in the future. Equally despondent was the view expressed by this same Indian tea proprietor as to the relative transport facilities possessed by the two countries from the tea-growing gardens to the port of shipment. Others, again, there are who attach much importance to the special reputation for activity, intelligence, shrewdness, and care which mark the mass of the Ceylon planters; the way in which they rub against and emulate each other—in striking contrast with the isolation and somnolence of most of their Indian brethren. Taking all these things into consideration, one authority after another can see no hope (as they maintain) of any escape by the districts they are interested in from the final consummation of the fears above expressed.

THE INDIAN ARMY.

(Times of India.)

It is now a twelvemonth since the Russian scare was upon us, and we were promised all kinds of things for the better defence of India. But the end of the twelvemonth has arrived and finds us as regards material just where we were. The artillery are armed with the same guns still, and the infantry with the same rifles.

We are told that something over 50,000 of the new infantry rifles will be ready for issue to the troops located in the British Isles by the end of this year. At least such is the manner in which we understand the announcement recently made in Parliament. At this rate we may well ask, when are the infantry regiments in this country likely to be provided with similar weapons? It must take two years to arm the infantry at home at this rate of manufacture; and, if we see every sepoy armed, as he should be, similarly, by the end of four years may we not think ourselves fortunate? If this forecast is correct, was it at all wise to rescind the order, which was actually issued last year, but which was countermanded, directing Martini-Henry rifles to be issued to Native regiments? What is the opinion of civil master armourers, who have just completed their inspections, regarding the state of the rifling of the Snider rifles with which the Native troops are now armed? Years ago we heard officers declare that the rifling of these weapons was in a most unsatisfactory state. The reason advanced for rescinding the order we refer to was because it was considered that it would lead to confusion in the distribution of ammunition in the field if the Native portion of the army were armed with Martini-Henrys, whilst the British had the new rifle. But if there is no prospect of the latter rifle being in the hands of British troops for several years, would it not be wiser to arm the Native regiments at once with Martini-Henrys, even if only "to prevent confusion in the field" between the ammunition for them and Snider cartridges?

Then, as regards the artillery, we have no hesitation in stating that the manner in which it is armed is a slur on the country; and that, consequently, it is small wonder that our Foreign critics commented so unfavourably on this point after the display they witnessed before Delhi. Ask the officers of this branch of the service what their opinion is, and we have not the shadow of a doubt that the generality of them will declare that their batteries were far more efficient when they were armed with the Armstrong breech-loaders than they are as armed with the present nine-pounder muzzle-loaders. Perhaps the artillery in India might aptly be described as being armed with probably one of the worst field guns in the universe, always excepting, of course, the old smooth bores. Thanks to the Army and Navy Gazette, we have learnt that at last the new breech-loading twelve-pounder has been approved of, and also the new pattern carriages. But as not more than a few experimental guns have been issued of this kind to the army at home, how long will it be before the artillery in India can be suitably equipped? If any one doubts the state of the artillery armament of India at this moment, let him turn up the recent issues of the Pioneer, which paper, by some flippant remarks it made regarding the non-necessity of an Inspector-General for this branch of the service, evoked from General Leslie, the late Inspector-General, Royal Artillery, in India, a scathing retort on this very point. Sir John Adye may or may not have a great deal to answer for in other respects, but that, as an apostle of the muzzle-loading system, he was one of the chief instruments of our pernicious act of retrocession from a breech-loading to a muzzle-loading gun for field artillery he could not deny. This very last drill season experiments have been carried out with increased charges of powder of a different make to that hitherto used with the present muzzle-loading nine-pounders, in the hope, it is to be presumed, of improving the shooting powers of these obsolete guns. Is this a satisfactory state of preparation? But such, we gather, is the state of affairs. It is not a case of want of men in these instances; it is a case of want of material. An ill-armed army is next in uselessness to no army at all. The remedy lies in our own hands, and that is to hurry on the re-equipment of both our infantry and artillery forthwith. It would be folly, or worse, to await the re-armament of the Home army, before taking that of the Indian armies in hand.

SHOCKING RESULTS OF OPIUM.

(Pioneer.)

The House of Commons had a dose of opium on the afternoon of May 4, and sank into unconsciousness about eight o'clock. Sir J. Pease was guilty of provoking this discreditable stupor by introducing his annual motion directed to the suppression of opium manufacture in India, and the abandonment by this Government of the revenue at present derived from that source. A brief and relatively cheerful stage of intoxication supervened while Sir Richard Temple sported with the subject. Then Mr. McIver weighed it in the balance of his judgment, and concluded that India could not spare the money. Then Mr. S. Howard made some decorous remarks on behalf of the Government, and pointed out that Sir J. Pease was getting more and more imperative in his successive proposals. He himself, on behalf of the Government, could not promise what he could not perform, but he had some comfort for Sir J. Pease after all. That gentleman had sent a memorial to the Secretary of State on the subject of opium-smoking in Burma, and the memorial had now been forwarded to the Viceroy. He was sure it would receive the consideration to which it was entitled considering the quarter from which it came. In view of this encouraging explanation, he hoped the honourable baronet would be satisfied with the progress his ideas had made, and would withdraw his motion. Sir J. Pease, however, was not fated to have an opportunity of explaining whether he was satisfied or dissatisfied. Sir George Campbell arose, and then—the drugged senses of Parliament gave way altogether, and its existence for that afternoon vanished in a count-out.

That is quite the most appropriate end that could be put to an opium debate. Sir J. Pease, in dealing with the subject, floats altogether in the land of dreams. He does not attempt to be practical. He merely reiterates the old idea that it is immoral to make money by pandering to an unhealthy appetite, and that a tax on vice which is profitable is a league with the powers of evil. It is not his business to raise the Indian revenue; he makes no attempt to say how the gap is to be stopped if the opium duty is abolished. He seems almost proud to take his stand upon the impractical ground of abstract morality. But human affairs are really too complicated to be legislated for in that simple way.

THE NEW GOORKHA REGIMENTS.

(Pioneer.)

We have insisted from the first that the true way of getting good recruits for the second battalions of the Goorkha Regiments is to arrange with the Khatmandu Durbar for free access of regimental recruiting parties to the interior of Nepal. The recent attempts at desertion on the part of the recruits collected and sent to India by the Nepalese authorities have shown that the contract, for such it practically is, entered into between the Government of India and the Durbar is a very one-sided one indeed. It is quite true that some thousands of recruits have been sent to our frontier stations, but they are not, in too many cases, the stamp of men required; and what is fatal to the continuance of the arrangement, the majority are now volunteers in the true sense of the word. Now, the great secret of success with a mercenary army is that the soldiers should enlist willingly and cheerfully, choosing the army as their permanent home, and looking forward to active service as the great object of their lives. In the case of our Goorkha regiments, which are certainly corps d'élite, there has hitherto been this feeling, the Goorkha being essentially a fighting man and seen at his best when actually engaged with an enemy. He is of the material of which heroes of the rank and file are made; he is, moreover, when on service, cheerful and contented in the face of difficulties; easily amenable to discipline; devoted to his English officers, with an unlimited faith in the genius of the European race; the best of friends with the English soldiers, and in every way a most valuable unit in the army to which he belongs. In quarters his behaviour is better than that of any nationality all the world over, the absence of serious crime in Goorkha cantonments being almost phenomenal. Such has been his history in the past, and it would be a fatal mistake to jeopardise his reputation now. And yet, if every second battalion is to have in its ranks men who are serving against their will, having been either impressed or enlisted by the Nepalese authorities under false pretences, the character of the corps d'élite on which we place so much reliance will inevitably suffer. The Commander-in-Chief has taken the only step which can make the new battalions really efficient, by drafting steady and tried men into them from the first battalions. Their example may do much to reconcile the recruits to their new life; but then we have to look to the future. The Durbar may keep up the annual supply of recruits by measures similar to those which they have recently adopted; but the military authorities will still have to face the difficulty of training men who are not voluntarily serving in the ranks.

THE EXHIBITION AND ORIENTAL ART.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

One result of the Indian portion of the Great Kensington show will probably be the establishment of the fact, that many of the industries we regard as of ancient Indian origin are purely modern growths. According to some would-be venomous writers, the British Government is responsible for the extinction of Oriental Arts and industries; and we are perpetually reminded of a time when the country was "steeped in gold and silver," and her products were to be found in all the markets of the world. Nothing could be further from fact. The Dacca muslin trade is invariably quoted as an example of a strangled industry; and it may be freely conceded that this delicate fabric has not been in demand since the extinction of the Great Mogul Courts. The armourers and koftgar's crafts have also been turned into other channels. But it would be easy to show that, for one artisan who earned his bread in these trades in times past, a dozen might now be counted. The writers to whom we refer, however, do not pin their argument to the periods of Mussulman rule; but expatiate on the wealth and glories of the ancient Hindu kingdoms. The students of the oldest literature of the country, and those who decipher the records and inscriptions left on stone and metal by the Hindus of old, seek in vain for evidence that Hindu India was ever supreme in the sumptuary arts. They find abundant confirmation of the belief that India was then as now, a purely agricultural country, sparsely populated, and interspersed with wide jungle tracts; while the life and manners of its people were marked by a rustic simplicity which, though admirable in itself, is distinctly adverse to success in the industrial arts. These flourish most conspicuously when associated with luxury; and the code of menu does not encourage luxury. That, side by side with rustic simplicity on the part of the people, there existed a remarkable aptitude for the pomp of carved stone on the part of the priestly class, in no wise affects the question. The massive temples of Orissa and Southern India, and the rock-hewn caves of Western India, were obviously never articles of exportation. Nor was the daily life of the rustic worshipper affected in any way by their splendour. Gold and silver were in all probability much more scarce then than now; while the elaborately wrought textiles of silk, wool, and gold, afterwards introduced by the Muhammadans, were simply impossible to people whose life was wily ordained to be one perpetual washing-day. It is equally clear that working in metal was in a rude and elementary state. For, when it is enacted that, after each meal, the brazen vessel is to be scoured with earth and water, all chased and engraved ornament becomes impossible. In pottery it is absolutely certain that nothing worthy the name was ever produced in ancient India, with the sole exception of the terra-cotta ornaments wrought for some few Buddhist temples. Porcelain was equally unattainable, for the very good reason that, until within the last few weeks, the existence of china clay was unknown in the land.

We may eventually see china produced, but it will be by Eurasian or English enterprise. The ancient life of India was admirable in many ways; but it is absurd to speak of it as a period of wealth or of success in the Industrial Arts.

THE MILITARY AND THE PRESS.

(Pioneer.)

Many military officers at home are exercised in mind by the recent order which forbids officers and soldiers from expressing their opinions, "anonymously or otherwise," in the Press upon matters under discussion. With unconscious irony, military officers, under all kinds of non de plume, have incontinently rushed in to express their opinion upon the order itself. But the question is perhaps of more importance to military officers in this country, whose connection with the Anglo-Indian Press—itsself of necessity largely concerned with purely military matters—is much more frequent than in England. The order need, however, cause no very great inconvenience either here or at home. No officer, hitherto, whose spirit has moved him to indite of things unpalatable to his superiors, has been accustomed to affix his name to his literary outbreak; and the authors of the order in question must be sanguine indeed if they think that so palpable a scarecrow will terrify that wily, irrepressible bird, the anonymous correspondent, who is always picking holes wherever he can get his ink-tipped beak in. Or even suppose the whole Service suddenly smitten with conscientious reverence for an order which the authorities cannot enforce, and refraining by mutual accord from converting their grievances into journalistic prose; there are always substitutes at hand, in the shape of amanuensis, friends, or wives. Supposing even further that the order appeared to all ranks so sacred that no such artifice could be employed, yet a man with a grievance can talk, and talk he will; and it would be a wise headquarters that should devise a dam through which some currents of the torrent of fault-finding speech would not filter into the Press. Then the position of affairs would be that military men of all ranks with grievances—and few are without them—being denied the safety-valve of the correspondence columns of the Press, would simmer to the boiling-point of discontent; while the Press, denied the advantage of mature professional opinions upon matters under discussion, would get them somehow secondhand, aggravated by enforced silence and magnified in passing from tongue to tongue; and the last state of military matters under discussion would be considerably worse than the first. There is no need, however, for such doleful forebodings. The effect of the order must be, as a little consideration ought to have shown its authors, and as the discussion of the order itself by military correspondents in the home papers proves, almost imperceptible.

ART EDUCATION IN INDIA.

(Times of India.)

One of the fruits of the old days where Natives did not mind spending money on noble works is the Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy School of Art. When it was founded great things were expected of it, and great fruits would have been reaped if Government had supported it with funds. An Indian Government does not mind squandering thousands in the aesthetics of brick and mortar according to the Public Works Department, but it grudges a few hundreds to train a nation of artists. It is a disgrace to the city of Bombay and a civilised Government to read in the Report of the Director of the School of Art that "owing to the want of a properly qualified teacher, the wood engraving has been discontinued during the year under report." The remark about the Art Metal Department has a touch of humour which softens rage. Mr. Burjorjee Nowrojee Tata, who was in charge of this department, has been obliged to sever his connection owing to his holding an appointment in the Abkari Department. He has left a foreman in charge to complete the orders in hand for some ornamental iron screens for the new G.I.P. Railway Terminus. When this work is completed, the atelier will be closed." It is difficult to trace the binding link between the Abkari Department and Art Metal Work, but perhaps Mr. Tata is a man of genius. Burnes was a gauger and a poet, and Mr. Tata may be an artist in metal work, who is wasting his sweetness in the Abkari Department. We trust that the atelier is not closed for a long time. We are glad to read that "proposals for the efficient working of the Wood Engraving and Art Metal Departments are before Government," and we trust that before many months have elapsed they will be settled by Government. In India we have handed down from generation to generation the best traditions of metal work. The artists of Hindustan rival the artists of Sidon. The object of a School of Art ought to be to preserve those traditions, and by collecting good examples of Indian Art endeavour to some extent to counteract the injurious influence which the large importations of European manufactures of the worst possible design have had on the native handicrafts. The Bombay Government acknowledge this fact, and in a wild fit of extravagance has permitted Rs. 500 per annum to be spent on objects of Oriental art. A sub-overseer wastes more in a month. Attached to this School of Art ought to be an atelier for goldsmiths' work. The jewellery of India is fast losing its native vigour, and we ought to do our utmost to counteract this evil. The silver ware of Cutch is beneath contempt. It is bad in design and vile in workmanship. A collection of good models of Indian jewellery ought not to be difficult to get, for the Indian jeweller cared little for intrinsic value, but a great deal for delicacy, beauty, and splendour. The Art School ought to contain a small weaving department and samples of the best patterns. Two hundred years ago a traveller wrote: "They make likewise excellent carpets of their cotton wool, in fine mingled colours, some of them three yards broad, and of a great length. Some other richer carpets they make all of silk, so artificially mixed, as that they lively represent those flowers and figures made in them." The fine mingled colours is fast becoming a thing of the past. In the jail carpets, as a rule, the dyes are hideous, and the colours crude. But the surroundings of a jail are not conducive to the progress of art. Pottery ought to be one of the departments of the Art School. It is made everywhere in India and has been from the ages of Manu. But it is only the pottery of Madura and the Punjab and Sind that can be claimed as art pottery, and as such it is of the highest excellence. Mr. Terry did a good work when he naturalised the manufacture of Sind pottery in Bombay, but the workshop ought never to have been divorced from the Art School, and money might have been well spent on experiments in trying to make it serviceable.

BENGAL.

THREE pupils of the Calcutta Girls' School, who went up for the preliminary examination in connection with the Countess of Dufferin's Fund, have all been declared qualified, and will enter on their medical studies this month.

PRESENTATION OF AN ADDRESS.—Some time ago the India General Steam Navigation Company, Limited, took over the fleet belonging to the Inland Flotilla Company, and since then the vessels of both concerns have been plying under the auspices of the former company. So favourably impressed were the commanders of the flats in the Flotilla Company with the kindness and courtesy of Mr. David Yule, the partner of the firm of Messrs. Andrew Yule and Co., the Flotilla Company's Agents, who was principally interested in the economy of the fleet, that they determined to present him with an address expressive of their respect and regard, and they accordingly did so one day last week. The document was printed in gold, on vellum, by Messrs. Newman and Co., and was well executed. Mr. Yule has occasion to be greatly gratified at the estimation in which he is held by his subordinates, and was, no doubt, pleased at the receipt of the address.

A DISAGREEABLE ADVENTURE.—Two planters returning in a dog-cart from a visit of inspection to an out-factory were attacked by an alligator whilst crossing a narrow stream at dusk, and here is the description of the scene by one of the occupants of the dog-cart:—"While crossing the shallow ford at Almora Ghat on the river Livery, a savage alligator, about 9 feet in length, attacked us in a most ferocious manner and, though L., myself, and the syce all shouted, he came right up to the shoulders of the horse, who began to plunge violently, and nearly had us over. At this critical moment I managed to stand up in the dog-cart and hit the fierce beast on the head repeatedly with my hunting-whip. The brute then dived and reappeared about four yards from the back of the dog-cart, and began swimming straight for the back-seat. I managed to turn the horse in the meanwhile and got into shallower water, when the alligator pulled up, but kept still swimming about the ford. Finally, a crowd of natives assembled, who threw clods into the water and made a great row, whilst we again dashed through the ford and got safely across, the men calling out all the while that they could see the head of the alligator above water a little way down the ford."

MADRAS.

MR. LYALL, the British Resident at the Court of Mysore, returned to Bangalore on Wednesday from Europe. Mr. Girdlestone, who has been acting as Resident, and who has succeeded making himself extremely popular at Bangalore, left on Thursday evening.

THE Military Secretary to the Government of Madras has issued an order stating that, as "the necessity for reducing expenditure under every head of charge susceptible of it is most pressing, the Right Hon. the Governor-in-Council desires that each item in establishments of all kinds and supplies of every description be closely scrutinised, and that detailed reports be submitted through the Controller of Military Accounts as early as possible, as to the economies practicable without loss of efficiency."

ON the retirement of Mr. Chisholm, says the Madras Mail, the Madras Government asked that the appointment of Consulting Architect might be made a permanent one, with a maximum salary of Rs. 1,200 a month, and requested that a suitable man, on a five years' covenant, might be sent out from England, on a salary of Rs. 900, rising to Rs. 1,200 by annual increments of Rs. 100. The Imperial Government approved of the proposal that the post of Consulting Architect should be a permanent post in the Madras P. W. D., but deprecated the suggestion that a man be procured from England, as it was doubtful if one with the necessary qualifications would come out on the salary offered, and if he did, he would have had no Indian experience. It was therefore recommended that, as there was always a number of officers in the P.W.D., who had a taste for architecture, the post be given to a P.W. Officer. The Madras Government having assented thereto, the Secretary of State has now sanctioned the post being made a permanent appointment, to be held by a P.W. Officer of any rank below that of Chief Engineer, the incumbent, if a Superintending Engineer already when taking up the appointment, or if promoted to such after appointment, being considered a supernumerary and in the roll for promotion.

THE thanks of the Government of India have been given to Captain A. H. Mason, R.E., late private secretary to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, for the able and complete manner in which he has compiled the revised edition of Colonel Paget's "Record of Expeditions against the Tribes of the North-West Frontier." The Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore says:—"This recognition is well merited, the new edition being a great improvement on the old, and is an important and very readable work of reference on border affairs."

MADRAS RAILWAY.—The annual meeting of the proprietors of this Company took place on Wednesday at the City Terminus Hotel. Mr. G. A. Taylor presided. The report stated that the gross revenue was £351,047 against £316,604 in the corresponding half-year of 1884, showing an increase of £34,983, or 11.04 per cent. The expenditure was £197,815 as compared with £192,419, being an increase of £7,396, or 3.84 per cent., and the net revenue was £151,832 against £124,245, an increase of £27,587. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said the operations of the Company during the half-year, ended in December, were again very favourable as compared with the corresponding period of the previous year. The improvement was due in almost equal proportions both to the goods and passenger traffic, and the increased revenue represented a dividend higher by  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. than any that had been earned for several years. The expenditure at the same time was somewhat larger—viz., £7,000 more, but it was satisfactory to note that the percentage of the expenses to the receipts was considerably less than in the corresponding six months. No doubt there was still room for improvement, and it would be the aim of the officials to study every economy compatible with the efficient working of the line. The increase in the coaching receipts amounted to £15,280, and the whole of this sum was contributed by third-class passengers, who numbered over 300,000 more than last year. With respect to goods, there had been a few variations in the traffic, the general result being an increase of 37,000 tons, yielding in revenue £19,000. In the locomotive department the expenditure was larger, but this was accounted for by the higher price of fuel, and by the fact that no less than 80,000 more train miles were run during the year. During the earlier months of the present year, owing to exceptional causes, the traffic both in passengers and goods showed a falling off, but there was every prospect of making up the leeway before the close of the half-year. Sir Thomas Pycroft seconded the motion, which was adopted nem con. Colonel G. C. Collyer and Major-General Mullins were afterwards re-elected directors of the Company.

NATIVE PRESS.

MAHOMEDANS AND THE BENGAL NATIONAL LEAGUE. (Muslim Herald.)

In the circular of the League received lately about 600 names are given, said to be of those who have since its formation notified their "adhesion" to it—in this there are about thirty-two Muhammadan names of little note and all the rest of Babus, &c. Under any circumstances this League cannot claim to be the representative body of the people of different nationalities inhabiting this country. The Indian Mirror, moved with the full blood-heat of April, went the length of declaring that "every Indian who is not a traitor will and must join the Bengal National League" (!) This is similar only to what was noticed in a juggler, who duped a number of simpletons and made them confess having witnessed a most extraordinary vision through his skill—the juggler cunningly enough having ruled that "if any one of them was not of pure birth could never see it." The poor wretches had no other alternative to protect the honour of their birth. We Muslims are a "curious set of people," no doubt, as the Indian Echo would describe us, but far from being simpletons to be duped by jugglers. By showing us the fear of being called "traitors" the Indian Mirror hopes to take us in, but we assure the Mirror that no Muhammadans of note will ever think of joining the League. We have our own reasons for it, and very sound reasons too. And if after all this explanation the Mirror tries again to use any severe expressions with intent to make them apply to our co-religionists it will only feel sorry for it, and will find itself too brittle to stand against them in any field.

INDIAN ADMINISTRATION.

(Indian Spectator.)

The real problem of Indian finance is not perhaps so much the reduction of the cost of the military army as that of this civil army. Is the growth of this civil army natural? Is it the spontaneous and necessary result of what may be called the political climate of India? Is it the legitimate child of the history and antecedents of the Indian people, or merely a bastard taking its composition and quality in the "lusty stealth of nature" and not in the lawful wedlock of the present with the past? Is it suited to the genius of the nation, and is it favourable to its progress? All these are questions which must be answered—and answered honestly—if our rulers know their own interest. But, unfortunately, they have not yet wholly made up their mind as to what their interest is. If they want to make themselves rich, let them fix a direct tribute payable by India, instead of saddling her with laws she does not understand, and burdening her with a machinery well designed for the execution of these laws—but too expensive and cumbersome to suit her altered fortunes. Let the administration be simple, direct, and straightforward. Let there be no technicalities, in heaven's name—no promises true to the ear but false to the hope—no crooked ways of making money and aggrandising unnecessary departments. Surround yourselves with trusty councillors, intimately acquainted with the people, not through the medium of reports and returns, but by means of their own direct observation and intercourse. Put a little more faith in your administrative officers after you have taken pains in their selection, and do not overwhelm them with your absurd demands for useless statistics. Do not puzzle your subjects with the variations of your laws. Be slow to make them and slow to alter them. It argues a morbid disease in your constitution, this precipitancy in legislation. Demand a more intimate knowledge of the vernaculars of the people from your civil officers than you now do—and let not your examinations in languages be a well-acted farce. Infuse a little more sentiment into your administration, and encourage your servants to obtain the goodwill of the ruled. Do not act as if India was a shop and you its keeper. Be a little more royal, and a little less despotic.

UNREFORMING BRAHMINS.

(Indian Spectator.)

Here is a nut to crack for advocates of education as the only means of effecting social reform amongst Hindus. The Nagar Brahmins of Gujarat are the most influential community in almost every respect. And they are so well "educated" as to boast of 98 per cent. of educated males and something like 94 per cent. of educated females amongst them—this, according to the Census Report referred to by the Gujarat, 98 and 94 per cent. respectively! It means progress beyond the dream of the most sanguine educationist. And yet what social advance have the Nagars made of late? Do they tolerate widow remarriage, for instance, if they cannot practice it? Nothing of the kind. Why, they have not yet made up their minds to allow young men of promise to go to England for study. They have been thinking about it for years. Two years ago the Nawab Sahib of Junaghar established a few travelling scholarships on behalf of his Nagar subjects. But the scholarships still remain unutilised. The elders of the community promised to consider the proposal seriously, with the aid of their priests, and the youngsters indulged liberally in tall talk —“everything has been settled, the candidates are ready, a steamer has been chartered, with Hindu crew and other servants. It is a glorious day for India”—so wrote some of the Hindu papers. Two years have passed since, but the reformers and the crew and the servants, the priests and the elders, are making no signs. The idea is no doubt alive, but its realisation is probably as far off as it ever was. Our speculative friends are still speculating, dreaming, discussing—they are, in a word, thinking. When pressed hard, they turn round covering their own weaknesses under the virtues of their remote progenitors—those “Aryan heroes” who did this, that, and the other thing, when the ancestors of the Briton “painted their skins” and otherwise lived as savages. The Nagars of Gujarat are, on the whole, a splendid race, highly developed both in body and in mind. Sooner or later they may venture out on the seas under prescribed rules. They may also pick up cricket and cycling in the course of the century. But as for social reform, and widow marriage especially, it is useless speaking to them. Individual effort is altogether beyond them, placed as they are at a cruel disadvantage for such effort. The pity of it is that they don't speak out, because they fear it would make them look so foolish. A race of born scholars and politicians, so to say, not able to mend their marriage customs when they are convinced of the necessity of reform! How odd! But how true, nevertheless!

THE SILVER QUESTION.

Mr. G. Molesworth gave a lecture at the United Service Institution, Simla, on May 2, on the silver question. The room was thronged, among the company being the Viceroy. Mr. H. Cunningham was in the chair. Mr. Molesworth based his lecture on the recently published prospectus of the Indian Silver Association, and began by dealing with the various alleged fallacies on the subject of bi-metallism alluded to therein. He then went on to deal with another subject which the prospectus had not touched, namely, the statement that the fall in exchange had been beneficial to India in stimulating export trade. Mr. Molesworth held that it was impossible that such was a fact. It was a case of post hoc non propter hoc argument, which would hold good if the purchasing power of gold had remained unaltered, but this had not happened. Prices of commodities had fallen with silver measured by its purchasing power. Gold had risen in value, while commodities and silver have remained nearly on the same level. The development of the export trade of India was fully accounted for by the Government policy of railway extension, and low rates of railway freight. In conclusion, Mr. Molesworth remarked that bi-metallism was neither new nor untried. It had stood the test of experience under the most trying circumstances. Alison had observed that the principal cause of the destruction of the Roman Empire was not so much its moral decay as its restricted currency. The world was again suffering from restricted currency. The remedy lay in the adoption of bi-metallism by the great European nations.

Sir Auckland Colvin, in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Molesworth, spoke as follows:—At the risk of exposing myself to the charge of having fallen into fallacy number one, I must admit that I imagined that to the ordinary mind there was some preliminary difficulty in comprehending the subject of the lecture; and therefore, we are more indebted to Mr. Molesworth for the pains he has taken in enabling us to understand all the bearings of bi-metallism. We are also indebted to him for the formation of the bi-metallic association, through the agency of which we have been called together here to-day. It was in a happy moment that Mr. Molesworth conceived the idea of forming what I may call the bi-metallic round table, and, like King Arthur of famous memory, bringing together the stoutest champions who could fight the bi-metallic battle; but I warn him that, like his prototype of old, he must be prepared to go far down into that battle-field in the West, where the faithless kinsman Modred has been encountered, and where alone victory can be assured. Mr. Cunningham has reminded us that it is ten years since the attention of the Government of India was first forcibly drawn to the probable effects upon its resources and revenues by the demonisation of silver by the various nations of Europe. Since that time the position of the Indian Finance Minister has been like that of the Seer. The Government of India has foreseen and foretold with painful anxiety and curious accuracy the full extent and nature of the evil about to fall upon it, but, while Government, favoured perhaps by its peculiar position, devoted much attention to the subject in England, the public mind has remained indifferent and inactive. The attitude taken by the English economists has been the source of all our troubles, and it has been to change that attitude, and (if I may use the phrase), enlighten their mind, on our duty in India, mainly lies. It is impossible to better describe the position taken up by eminent men in India than by looking at the case of Mr. W. Bagehot. This eminent economist took up from the first a strong position upon the question of silver, and was so convinced of the accuracy of his views, and the inaccuracy of the views pressed upon him from this side of the Isthmus of Suez, that he urged his opinions in a small book. I wish particularly to draw attention to the arguments by which this extremely able man believed he was going to meet the difficulties pressed upon him. He said, writing in March, 1877, the fall in the price of silver was only temporary, a phrase not likely to be permanent; secondly, that countries with silver currency would soon carry off the temporary surplus. Where are these propositions now? Silver has now fallen to forty-five shillings per ounce, and shows every sign of going still lower; and the influx of silver into India has not, as far as our information goes, received the special stimulus expected. I have no wish to fall foul of the memory of Bagehot; but I wish he had been alive now with the experience of the past ten years behind him. Had he lived, I feel sure that, like other eminent converts, he would have been one of our staunchest allies. The moral to be learnt from this episode is the necessity for continuing to enforce upon the English mind the extent of our experience on the subject, in the hope of inducing the English people, instead of passing by on the other side, to pour balm upon our wounds and aid us in our distress.

DISTRESS IN THE HIMALAYAS.

A singular scarcity of men prevails this year at most of the Hill Stations of Upper India, owing to the number of men who have taken leave to England or Kashmir.—Newsletter.

There's wailing on the Camel's Back;
There's grief on Simla Mall;
Blank horror thrills the Murree Hills
And broods o'er Naini Tal.
The dances stop; the dinners drop;
The blattant bands are dumb;
The maidens wait disconsolate
For men who never come.
The 'rickshaws run—none run beside,
Uncavaliered they go;
The only mails [Her Majesty's]
Accentuate their woe.
Ah, ha! they scorned our simple worth
In other livelier years;
Come, let us mock their misery,
And gloat upon their tears!
Go ask the bounding barasingh
Where are your partners gone!
Speak to the flying P. and O.,
Or Thomas Cook and Son!
They hunt another quarry now,
The men whose loss you grieve;
For half of them are in Kashmir
And half at home on leave.
For six short weeks each rover seeks
A broader, bustling Mall—
A cool, electric lighted Ind
Behind the Albert Hall.
What is the scent of deodars—
The bray of G-ldst-n's band—
To odours dear of London smoke,
And tumult of the Strand?
They will return, I know them well,
But you must eke till then
A semi-torpid season out
With “boys” and aged men.
The rawest thing in uniform,
The rowdiest in check,
Shall save your dance from breaking down,
Your picnic from a wreck.
Go up, bald-headed patriarchs!
Time brings again your chance;
A dado of sweet wallflowers
Is withering for a dance.
Fly, flaxen-headed innocence!
Flirt while your Fate allows;
The Law is kind and does not bind
A minor to his vows.

—Civil and Military Gazette.

Mr. GREGSON, the Secretary of the Soldiers' Total Abstinence Association, who has just returned to India from England, where he was endeavouring to secure situations for time-expired men, is now doing other good work for the Indian Army besides reclaiming its drunkards. Having found very great difficulty in his endeavours here to get employment for soldiers leaving the service, owing to the depressed state of the labour market, he has, like a sensible man, boldly told the men of his failure, and has strongly advised them to re-engage and remain in a Service where they are much better off than numbers of working-men at home willing, but unable to get work. The Indian brewers complain that Mr. Gregson has diminished the drinking strength of the Indian Army to the extent of about 10,000 men; if he now adds some thousands of good and effective soldiers to its fighting strength by encouraging re-enlistment he will be doing the State much service and adding to his own high and popular reputation.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

FRANK'S RANCHE; OR, MY HOLIDAY IN THE ROCKIES.*

"Frank" is the, somewhat Bohemian, son of a well-to-do septuagenarian. He "makes tracks" to various parts of the Western States of North America; and, if he does not at once "strike oil," the book leaves him in a fair way to make a fortune. Needless to say that Frank finds it requisite often to have recourse to the respected individual, erst known as a father, but now as a "relieving officer." The latter, in response to repeated inquiries what has become of the money which he has been sending, simply replies "Come and see." This the septuagenarian parent does, and is satisfied that young Hopeful is a second Tom Thurnall—only that T. T. never had a penny from his father—and is on the high road to prosperity.

It used not to be given to all to go to Corinth, nor is it now in the power of everyone to visit the Rocky Mountains, here familiarly and deservedly called the "Rockies." If any one desires rambles beyond railways, and is not particular to such a trifle as encountering icefloes two hundred miles long on his outward and homeward voyages, he cannot do better than take our author as his guide for a trip to those parts of Western North America—certainly the most interesting—which he traversed. Not to speak of the wild beauty of the entire country, the natural phenomena are of the most remarkable description. Snow-steeps—of course utilized for timber-shooting—far longer than any known in Europe, geysers beside which Iceland can but hide its diminished head, are only a part, and by no means the most important part, of the wonders of these as yet but half-explored mountain ranges.

Long since one Dr. Cumming told mankind that the world had reached its last year; a prediction which, by the way, he did not fail to repeat on at least one subsequent occasion. We had always been led to believe that the date of the end of the world was the one thing which no one could foretell. But that the earth's surface accommodation, in proportion to the increasing number of its occupants, is steadily diminishing, and must eventually reach a stage where even standing room will no longer be obtainable, there can be no more doubt than there is as to the advisability of a more equal diffusion of its inhabitants, in other words, of emigration from the more, to the less, densely populated regions. And, if this little work does no more than indicate to the readers of this (its fourth) edition, a place where, if they do not mind—and what emigrant worth his salt does mind?—roughing it, they can all but certainly prosper, it will have done good service. To reach the locality one has not to encounter the risks which beset the approach to gold diggings, wherever situate; the land is absolutely a virgin soil, the crops being simply marvellous—40 to 75 bushels of wheat per acre, while strawberries yield (p. 140) £100 net profit for the same extent of land—the climate healthy, and the fishing such as to make the piscatorial mouth water.

The little volume is written in a pleasant and attractive style, and may well influence, in the choice of his future "diggings," any one who, being tired of the old world, desires to "locate" in the new.

BIHAR PEASANT LIFE.†

No reader needs to be reminded that Bengal, Bihar, and Orissa were among the earliest possessions of the East India Company, and among the three none is more interesting than Bihar. The large proportion of Muhammadans which its population contains, and the vast influence which they wield, would alone make it remarkable. The "bold peasantry, the country's pride" of Bihar has never, within our remembrance, been the subject of an exhaustive monograph, such as the present. We have here, brought by description within the scope of the mental, and, by the means of photographs, within that of the physical, vision, the peasant himself, his house, and the implements which he uses in connection with agriculture. Taking the word peasant (paysan) in its more extended (and original) sense of a dweller in the country, the author gives us an excellent account of the life of the country boatmen and artisans, and of the tools used by them in their several pursuits. Of the exhaustiveness of this account—a character which it possesses in common with the entire work—it may suffice to say that we have in it (pp. 83 to 116) a complete description of the tools and appliances used by no less than thirty-three trades:—the weaver's brush-maker, the brass bangle-maker, the lac bangle-maker, the weapon-cleaner, and all the minor trades which are comprised in a prosperous native community, being carefully distinguished, and their utensils depicted as well as described.

This alone would make the book one of no little value. But, after all, "there's a deal of human nature in man," and one is apt to consider the makers and utilizers of implements more than the implements themselves. And so, though Mr. Grierson has given us, incidentally, many most interesting, and, in not a few cases, little known, details regarding the people, while he was primarily dealing with the implements of husbandry and trade, one involuntarily turns from these matters, and from the author's careful examination (pp. 159, sqq.) of soils, to the portion of the work which more especially relates to the domestic appliances (p. 117, &c.) and the house, diet, trade, and life generally, of the peasantry and artisans of Bihar. To these Mr. Grierson has devoted nearly one hundred-and-fifty pages, and he has performed a real service in so doing.

Marriage, a subject of scoffing to the cantankerous bachelor, and the main object (as the last chapter of the third volume of every novel doth bear witness) of interest to the fair sex, deservedly occupies no small part of the pages devoted to the life of the toiling millions of Bihar, the marriage ceremonies of both Hindus and Musalmans being described. The unsophisticated Hindus of this province have not, it would seem, reached a state of puzzledom as to the exact point (short of actual cohabitation) when a Hindu marriage may be considered as complete; though this has, in the well-known case of Ruhmibai—the "Hindu lady" of the Times of India—recently perplexed the High Court of Bombay. But the ceremonial in Bihar, as in other parts of India (from which it in some cases (p. 373) occasionally differs), is so elaborately tedious that a very small part of it ought to be efficacious. The Musalman ceremonies do not materially vary from those in use elsewhere in India. The customs attendant on birth naturally follow those which usher in marriage. Many of them will be familiar to most of our readers. But some are peculiar. For instance, a child, whose elder brother is dead, is "treated and dressed as a girl, sold to the midwife for a few cowries, and bought back again, and given an opprobrious name, in order to induce the Demon of Death to think it of small account, and not worth killing."

We can cordially recommend this work, the value of which is enhanced by a very full table of contents, an exhaustive Index of terms, and many illustrations from photographs, as well by a map of the Province of Bihar. Altogether, we have rarely seen a more vivid presentment of Native rural life in India.

REVOLTED IRELAND.‡

Mr. Canning, believing, as he tells us in his Preface, "that the remarkable period of 1798 might, instructively, be called to public attention at the present time," here gives us, besides quotations (which may profitably be pondered), from various authorities on the subject, his own well-considered remarks by way of setting to these gems of thought. The causes of Irish discontent are so numerous and so curiously complicated, that it is no easy task to unravel the tangled web. Mr. Lecky (quoted in a note to p. 3) long since said that "the picture is a strangely confused one, the lines of division of Irish and English, of Catholic and Protestant, of Royalist and Republican, crossing and intermingling."

We do not propose to follow Mr. Canning in his historical sketch of the events of 1798, or of those of the miniature rebellion of 1803, rightly described as "the last wave" of the previous movement (p. 90). The masterly performance—for such it is—would only lose lucidity and distinctness by any attempt at concentration. But there are some points to which it may be well to advert. The demeanour of the Irish priests (many of them almost as illiterate as their flocks) as supporters of rebellion is not less noteworthy than it has been throughout consistent. Mr. Canning sensibly remarks: "While, in every other European country, Catholic priests and popular demagogues were, and still continue, implacably opposed, in Ireland alone they are in many respects united. Ardent Catholic and Protestant writers alternately praise and blame the Irish priesthood, but impartial historical students will perceive that the religious history of Europe generally has placed them inevitably in the exceptional position which they occupy in Irish politics and estimation."

The rebellion of 1798 placed the priesthood, so to speak, between two fires, on the one hand of the infidel French allies whom Wolfe Tone's pertinacity had procured, and who landed with loud denunciations of the Pope, and, on the other, of British Protestant Rulers, who had for many years persecuted their religion in Ireland; and it is not a little remarkable that at the conclusion of the rebellion the spiritual authority and political influence of the priests should have been (p. 83) "apparently greater than at its commencement."

That the anti-rent movement, into which, again, the priesthood have thrown themselves with such ardour, is quite a new thing, was shown, some few years ago, by Mr. Sullivan, in his "New Ireland." The Catholic tenant farmers, he reminds us, regarded subjection to England, with "the confiscations of six centuries," as a "change of masters to whom rent was payable; but never a change which annihilated their right to occupy the land on payment of its rent"; nor, it may be added, their duty to pay it so long as their occupancy lasted.

On the subject of the so-called Home Rule we have (p. 117) some pertinent remarks. "One peculiarity of Irish revolutionary feeling from '98 to the present day is well worth notice: it seems to desire and pursue an ideal Government, an attractive fancy, which has no existing model. . . . In spite of all the eloquent censure of British rule uttered by Irish orators, no other European Government seems to please them better. Neither the Swedish, Russian, German, Austrian, or Spanish, monarchies are praised, though they present instances of Greek, Roman Catholic, and Protestant Churches in political supremacy. Yet none are chosen for Irish imitation, or avowedly preferred to the much-abused rule of England. The United States of America are alone occasionally mentioned as Ireland's model, but it should be remembered that in the civil war there, since '45, the Irish took opposite sides in the contest" (p. 119).

The characters of the various Irish leaders, from Tone and the Emmets to O'Connell and C. S. Parnell, are well and carefully analyzed, and the Irish tendency to hero worship pointed out. It was, as Mr. Canning reminds us, Spenser, who said of Irish bards, "whomsoever they find to be most lawless in his doings, most dangerous and desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify in their rhymes"; a tendency inherited by Moore, who wrote some fine verses on poor Robert Emmet, the misguided victim of the would-be rebellion of 1803.

This book is the outcome of a careful perusal of the works of many authors—no less than thirty-nine being referred to by name—digested by a very thoughtful mind. It is eminently suggestive, and, therefore, eminently valuable; and can well be commended as an important aid to the consideration of the subject which it treats.

It is a healthy sign of the day to see Native chiefs show an inclination to visit England. The Raja of Narsingurh, in Central India, who calls himself unfortunate in not having received an English education, proceeds to England. It is hoped that the other chiefs in Central India will follow his example.

THE BENGAL FORESTS.—Last year the output of timber and fuel in the Bengal forests considerably decreased. This was partly owing to the fact that a large quantity from the clearings for tea cultivation in the Kurseong and Jalpaiguri districts was thrown on to the market at cheap rates in the previous year, and partly to an overstocked market at Chittagong. But another great reason for the decline was the operation of the Calcutta Wood Traders' ring. There was also a considerable falling-off in the export of timber and firewood from the Sunderbunds, which caused a rise in the price of the latter in Calcutta. The wonder seems to be that so much timber is annually cut in the Bengal forests, seeing that last year no fewer than 116 woodcutters were killed by tigers, and several paras were abandoned in consequence of the number of men carried away from them by tigers. From one para on the Bhudder river no less than seventeen woodcutters were carried away, and the remainder, as was not unnatural, lost faith in the fakir who dwelt there specially to protect them by religious observances against the tigers, and deserted the para. Shooting in the dense jungle of the Sunderbunds is extremely difficult, and it is, therefore, not surprising to hear that only fifteen full-grown tigers and one tiger cub were killed during the year. For these rewards amounting to 385 rupees were paid.

A CALCUTTA paper says:—"A number of his subjects from Ladakh have sent a deputation to Jummoo to complain to the Maharajah of Cashmere regarding alleged evils in the administration. The deputation is a large one, consisting of three hundred people, who are stated to have declared that if the Maharajah will not grant them the redress they demand they will go on to Simla and lay their case before the Viceroy." A Jummoo telegram says:—"The Maharajah himself displays great concern for the welfare of his subjects, but the influence of the newly-appointed Prime Minister is said to be misguiding him, and it is advisable that the Government of India should immediately insist upon the Resident participating in the actions of the Council so as to prevent miscarriages of justice. Nothing seems in order, and great confusion prevails in consequence of the differences of opinion among the Ministers, whose action seems actuated by a desire to supplant each other, and whose mutual dissension will result in the ruin of the country." This does not read like a favourable beginning of the young chief's rule.

AFTER the Hyderabad Grand Raffle, which was advertised some time ago, has been drawn, lotteries, according to a recent order of the Nizam, will no longer be permitted in his Highness's dominions.

A CORRESPONDENT, writing to an up-country paper, advocates the reduction of the salaries of managers on tea estates belonging to companies:—"The British public have become accustomed," he says, "to pay a certain price for their tea, and are every year trying to obtain a better article without additional cost. Planters have to suffer many hardships and inconveniences in various forms in the performance of their duties, but there seems no other possible way left for agents now, of answering the cry which is incessantly being raised on all sides to reduce the expenditure on gardens." He goes on to say that, "in the present depressed state of the market, with the object of obtaining for Indian tea the first place in all countries where it has to compete with the China manufacture, they cannot afford to pay managers so handsomely. Private gardens might be able to pay their managers well, and, at the same time, sell cheap."

OUDE AND ROHILKUND RAILWAY COMPANY.—The proprietors in this company held their half-yearly meeting on Wednesday last at the offices, 29, Martin's-lane, Cannon-street, Mr. J. Pender in the chair. The report and accounts showed that the total receipts for the half-year ended December 31st last had been £241,804, against £215,311 in the same period of 1884; and the net earnings had been £72,892, against £71,681. In the gross receipts there had been an increase of £26,493, or 12·30 per cent., while the profit had been £1,210 more, or an increase of 1·69 per cent. The Chairman proposed the adoption of the report, stating that he thought the increase in the traffic would be regarded as satisfactory, considering the circumstances that had prevailed during the half-year. The passenger traffic had suffered from several causes, but for which its growth would have been larger. As it was they had carried 150,000 more passengers, at an increased revenue of £4,333. In their merchandise traffic there had been an increase of £11,470, and they carried 128,000 tons more. The expenses had increased by £25,255, through charges of an exceptional nature, but the staff had done all they could to keep down the expenses. By the opening of the northern extension throughout from Moradabad to Saharanpore their regular system would be greatly benefited. After speaking of the continued satisfactory progress of the works in connection with the bridge over the Ganges at Benares, he referred to the prospects of the working for the current half-year, and stated that they would probably earn the guaranteed interest. The motion was seconded by General Beadle, and carried; and the other business having been disposed of, the meeting closed in the usual way.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF ANCIENT BUILDINGS.—The ninth annual report of this Society, presented at the annual meeting held on Tuesday, June 8, in the Hall of the Society of Arts, London, the Hon. R. C. Grosvenor in the chair, contained the following reference to Indian monuments:—"A question of considerable importance to the people of this country, on account of the responsibility which directly rests upon them in the matter, is that of the preservation of the ancient monuments of India. Notwithstanding the natural effects of time and of past indifference and neglect, and in spite of the destructive tendencies of men, either avowedly hostile or the instruments of erroneous principles, which in India, as elsewhere, have been, and unhappily continue to be, so fatal to the truthful preservation of much that is noblest in the works of past ages—in spite of all these influences, there still remains scattered over the wide extent of India a profusion of monuments, which for numbers, variety, elaborate beauty of decoration, and historic interest, are probably unrivalled in any other part of the globe of anything like equal extent. Circumstances lately drew the attention of the Committee to a particular section of these monuments, the Mohammedan buildings of Bijapur, and a memorial was addressed to the Governor of Bombay, of which copies have been circulated among the members of the Society. No answer has yet been received to the memorial, but the high character borne by Lord Reay, and the enlightened views which he is well known to hold, are such as to justify the Society in believing that representations made on behalf of so important an object will not fail to be earnestly considered. The question of the Bijapur monuments is, however, but a part, and, in spite of its intrinsic importance, it is, comparatively speaking, but a small part of a large subject. That subject is by no means unattended with difficulties, and its numerous and varying details are such as cannot be effectually dealt with by a society whose energies are necessarily, to a large extent, absorbed by the abundant work continually pressing for its attention in its surrounding neighbourhood. The Committee will, however, feel grateful to any member of the Society for help or information which a personal knowledge of India and of its monuments may enable such members to afford them. There is one point in particular which seems worthy of consideration—namely, whether it might not be possible to bring into existence an association in India in which Englishmen and Natives of all races and denominations would combine for the protection and preservation of monuments, in which all, but especially the Natives of the country, are so deeply interested."

INDIAN JUDICIAL APPOINTMENTS.

A CORRESPONDENT signing himself "An Indian Barrister" complains in the Times of yesterday of the manner in which the appointments to the barrister branch of the benches of the different High Courts in India are made:—

Ever since the establishment of the High Courts in India—viz., at Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, and Allahabad—in 1862, the analysis of the barrister appointments shows that fourteen of these permanent Judges have sat from time to time in Calcutta up to this year, six in Madras, six in Bombay, and six in Allahabad, making thirty-two in all.

All these have been appointed from England with the exception of seven, who, being members of the English and Irish Bars, had gone out to India to practise there shortly after their call, and were appointed from there. Of the twenty-five who were appointed direct from England none ever practised or set foot in India before, and knew nothing of its laws and customs. Of the seven three were Advocates-General, and, including the other four, all had very powerful influence at home, the last one appointed being the brother of Mr. Trevelyan.

Of the twenty-five above alluded to eight were Chief Justices, two had been in India before. Of the other six none had practised in India. The remaining seventeen were all imported from England and had all their passages paid out and outfits involving a total cost all round of over £20,000 out of the Indian exchequer. In calling attention to these appointments the Indian public naturally ask why it is that the members of the barrister branch should be imported from England when there are over 100 English and Irish barristers practising in India at the bars of the four High Courts who have gone out to India early in life, studied the laws, languages, and customs of the country, are engaged in extensive practice there, and are in every way fit, and more so than the recent importations, to fill the highest judicial offices in the country.

The question which the writer says the "Indian public naturally ask" is, we are inclined to believe, one of personal rather than of general interest. And we are strengthened in this belief by the perusal of the paragraph which follows the above:—

The civilian Judges, who have never been trained in law, have been considered fit after a number of years to ascend the benches of the High Courts; but a barrister who has been there all his life and has, in many cases, commenced from the lowest grade of his profession—viz., that of an articulated clerk—in India, and by dint of perseverance and ability risen to that of solicitor and then barrister, is simply told on application for such an appointment that his application has been noted.

The writer "protests too much." Surely the Civil Servant who goes out to India early in life, and who is obliged to study the laws, languages, and customs of the country has a fair claim to a seat upon the bench of the High Court if he has given proof of his fitness for the same. How many of the barristers practising at the bars of the Presidency Courts can show the same qualifications? How many of them trouble themselves about acquiring even a colloquial knowledge of the Native languages? And how many of these legal gentlemen have commenced their career as articled clerks in India, and risen, by dint of perseverance and ability, to the position of solicitor and then of barrister, which, according to the writer, would appear to be progressive grades of the profession, instead of being distinct branches of it? The profession of solicitor is, generally speaking, a much better paying one in India, as it is at home, than that of barrister, and where a change has been made from one to the other it has more often been that the barrister has gone back to be a solicitor, than that the solicitor has rushed forward to become a barrister. The inference to be drawn from the writer's complaint is that he has an individual grievance in view—hinc illæ lachrymæ.

But the Secretary of State for India, upon whose recommendation the judicial appointments are made by the Queen, comes in for unqualified censure. The method of making these appointments is, we are told, "simply scandalous, and shows an utter disregard of all claims founded on experience, merit, ability, and thorough knowledge of the country, its laws, manners and customs. It is founded on mere jobbery and backstairs influence." And this castigating assertion is followed by a still more sweeping one to the effect that "all the appointments, from first to last, have been of men going circuit who, on going out to India, have always cut very sorry figures on the Bench at first, and have entailed heavy losses to suitors in frequent appeals owing to their want of grasp of equitable principles, and their utter ignorance of Hindoo and Mahomedan law, and that great body of customary law which has its foundation in equity and good conscience."

The barrister judges who have retired from the Indian Bench and who still have their faculties about them might give a very simple but complete reply to this calumination, but they can afford to treat it with indifference, knowing that the record of their work done speaks for itself against the calumniator. But the cloud which, according to the writer, overshadows the career of the rising legal luminaries at the Bar in India has its silver lining, in which there is no sign of depreciatory value, as in the case of the silver of commerce. The ideal Indian barrister, who is master of the laws, languages, and customs of the country, will probably be found to be doing so well, in a pecuniary sense, as to have no ambition to become a judge. Elevation to the Bench would be a monthly loss to him of many rupees. This is no ideal picture. At the present moment we could name barristers practising at the Courts in the three Presidencies who would decline the higher honour for this very simple but very sound reason. And this fact will, perhaps, explain what the writer in the Times calls "another anomaly"—that "on the departure of the permanent Judges on leave, some of the members of the bar practising there have been asked by the local Government to act, and thus lay claim to a permanent appointment, and I believe that not one of these men who have so acted has ever had a permanent appointment conferred on him." Possibly not, and for the reason that it was known that he would not have accepted it owing to the more lucrative nature of his own work.

It may be that many a "briefless" barrister in India has in him all the "makings" of an eminent Judge just as "many a gem of purest ray serene, the dark unfathom'd caves of ocean bear;" but before believing the Secretaries of State for India during the past twenty years to have been one and all guilty of jobbery and abuse of patronage in the judicial appointments which they have recommended, it would be as well to inquire whether such a charge would be endorsed by the Indian bar itself? We throw not. The legal gentlemen of ability in the East thoroughly believe in the Darwinian exposition of the "survival of the fittest," and only the "briefless" mean that law.

COMPARISONS, adverse to General Prendergast have been made by a contemporary, between the Duke of Wellington's famous Waterloo despatch and the last notice of services in Burma. It is true that more military heroes are officially commemorated for Burma than, in the first instance, for Waterloo; but we must remember there is all the difference between the report of a single engagement, however momentous, and the history of a prolonged guerilla campaign, where fighting may go on in a hundred different places, and a hundred commanders have each on a small scale all the responsibility and more than all the danger that falls to the generals in a great fight. Besides, the Duke of Wellington's despatch mentions no soldier below colonel's rank, and—unless gallantry before middle age was an unknown quality in the days of Waterloo—for every hero mentioned at least ten equally deserving were left out. It is a general's grateful task to notice all who do their duty well, and a despatch which mentions even subalterns who had been unexpectedly saddled with the responsibilities of field officers in isolated conflicts, and acquitted themselves markedly well, errs on the right side.—Pioneer.

SIMLA OR CALCUTTA?

Regarding the anxious question as to whether Simla is to be made the permanent headquarters of the Government or not, a correspondent from that Sanitarium writes:—

"There is no doubt a certain substratum of facts in the will statement now made that the Government offices now at Simla will never more move down to the plains, that the Viceroy will visit Calcutta for only a month each year to transact all urgent legislative business, that the great public buildings in the 'City of Palaces' will be let out on reasonable terms to speculative hotel-keepers, and that, finally, 'allowances' of all sorts are to be known no more. But I think that if the matter be looked into closely, the only foundation for the rumours will be found to be the call by the Finance Committee for a statement from the P.W.D., showing the saving to Government effected by leaving at Simla during the winter a portion of the office of the Accountant-General, P.W.D., and also for returns from all offices in Simla, giving particulars of family allowances drawn by Government clerks. The saving effected in the P.W.D. is something considerable, although only some half-a-dozen men are located permanently at Simla, and if the experiment be tried of keeping all the offices at Simla, the saving will amount to several lakhs. The saving would be enormous if the offices were kept at Calcutta, but this would involve much personal discomfort to heads of departments, while residence at Simla would, without any sacrifice of comfort, give the Government quite a respectable sum, though by no means so large an amount as the Calcutta plan would yield. I believe and, indeed, I partly know that there are some persons in high authority who advocate strongly a permanent residence at Simla. Sir Stuart Bayley thinks the winter will improve the physique of the clerks, and the Hon. Mr. W. W. Hunter says that the only way to make the clerks appreciate the benefits of the climate is to dock them of the miserable addition to their salaries, technically known as 'allowances.' Dr. Hunter should be an authority on the subject of good climates and fat 'allowances,' for is it not written in the chronicles of the Finance Department that he put in several years' Indian service in London, and drew in England the pay and perquisites properly payable only for work done in this country? When, therefore, I find him among the prophets of the Finance Committee, preaching on the subject of allowances, and crying out vanitas vanitatum, it is with supreme difficulty I can refrain from thrusting my tongue into my cheeks, and breaking out into a chronic smile. There is not a man on the Finance Committee who does not draw allowances of some sort, and there is not a single one who does not find it far more economical living here than in the plains, for down country, for pure shame's sake, the small official must maintain a certain state, while here three or four 'chum' together and live as cheaply as possible. But if the higher officials find living in Simla economical, the smaller men can with difficulty exist on their pittances. The subordinate cannot possibly live more cheaply than his official superior, for the superior lives as parsimoniously as any man can; but the cost of even so living is higher than the clerk can afford, and very much beyond what would enable him to pass life comfortably in the plains. I fear I have been digressing, but I trust that I have shown why one class of Government servants are anxious to live at Simla, while another look on life in the hills as nothing short of an affliction. Personally, I would like nothing better than to pass the rest of my life in India at Simla, yet I must say there are hundreds who would be far happier in the plains. Compelling these to live at Simla is positive cruelty; depriving them of a portion of their present income, nothing short of a crime.

"The advocates of the permanent Simla residence look upon the numerous and costly public buildings that have sprung up here within the past few years as the strongest argument in their favour. I say nothing against the new buildings; they are certainly far more suited for offices than the wretched, ill-ventilated, badly-lighted private houses of former days. But if they are to be treated as standing arguments in favour of the higher official side of the question, I honestly think the men who ordered the construction of the buildings should be indicted for maladministration of public money. A decade back the Secretary of State restricted the Imperial expenditure on works at Simla to fifteen lakhs, of which one-third was to be spent on sanitary improvements and the balance on the purchase of houses for the Viceroy and staff. The ten lakhs was very soon spent, and the Home Government emphatically refused to sanction further expenditure on the construction of public offices; but it was felt here that until we had established ourselves firmly on the soil, the annual Simla trip would never be a certainty. Money was spent contrary to orders on constructing costly public offices, and though the Hon. T. C. Hope has personally looked into details in order to curtail the expenditure as much as possible, the outlay has exceeded the sanctioned limit a hundredfold. Buildings so erected should not, I think, speak very much in favour of those who would like to stay here permanently."

BRIGADIER-GENERAL STEWART has been appointed to the command of the Hyderabad Contingent, and not to the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE Government of Madras, in ordering Rs. 21,700, the amount of the deficiency of Major Tew, late Paymaster of the Scots Fusiliers, expresses the opinion that all necessary precautions were taken by the Military Accounts Department in connection with his irregularities, and considers the imputation of negligence and inaction recorded in the sentence passed by the court-martial against the department was improper and without evidence in justifying such a conclusion.

MAJOR FLETCHER, Assistant Inspector-General of Ordnance, Bombay has been appointed Superintendent of the Gunpowder Factory, Madras.

THE Government hired transport Hankow, 2,832 tons, Captain W. Mackenzie, arrived in harbour on Tuesday from Suakin, which she left on the 14th ultimo, towing the Indian Marine ship Czarevitch, Captain Finny. The payment of squadrons has been increased from Rs. 43 to 53; the forge allowance in Bengal and Madras has been fixed at Rs. 60 per regiment; the banker's allowance in the Central India Horse at Rs. 40 per regiment; and the repair of arms allowance in Bombay regiments at Rs. 140 per mensem.

OBITUARY.

DEATH OF MAHARAJAH HOLKAR.

The Times Calcutta Correspondent telegraphs that Maharajah Holkar died at Indore on the 17th inst. The death of the Maharajah, at the comparatively early age of fifty-three, cannot be considered altogether unexpected, as he has been ailing for some time, but none the less it is an important event in Central India, as threatening to introduce an element of disturbance into the happily prosperous and satisfactory condition of that province which has existed for thirty years, and for much of the credit of which the late Maharajah Holkar and his neighbour Scindiah must be considered deserving. The late Maharajah Tuckaji Rao was placed on the throne by the direct intervention of the English Government, which, tired out by ten years' disorders in Indore, asserted its inherent right to interfere for the good of the State, and chose Tuckaji Rao, then a boy of eleven years of age, as the most eligible and promising of all the available candidates. When the Indian Mutiny broke out Tuckaji Rao had been intrusted with his sovereign rights only a few years, and it was said at the time of the attack on the Indore Residency and the withdrawal of the acting Agent, Major (afterwards Sir Henry) Durand, that Holkar more than half-sympathised with the mutineers. The question as to whether he did or not long formed the point of a keen controversy, and which even now cannot be deemed closed. A practical proof may be applied to the accuracy of this statement. The Maharajah Holkar desired the acquisition of certain pieces of territory as a recognition of his good services during the Mutiny. We believe this territorial favour would not have been withheld so recently as the restoration of Gwalior Fort to Scindiah, but the Indian Government refused to accept the reason wished by the Maharajah for the conference of this honour. Whatever the conduct of the Maharajah during the Mutiny may have been—and it is only fair to say that he was then a young man with little experience of the responsibilities of his rank and position—it is only fair to say that his conduct in the twenty-seven years that have since elapsed has been singularly prudent and circumspect. Unlike many other Indian chiefs, he devoted himself to the task of raising the prosperity of his State and increasing the welfare of his people. Indore has increased under his care in both population and wealth. The revenue of the State doubled during his reign, and the greatest advantage has been extracted from the natural capabilities possessed by the Malwa Province for the cultivation of opium. While extremely tenacious of his rights as head of the State against any individual, he still showed a sound appreciation of the fact that the good of the community must redound to the advantage of the chief, and his main efforts were directed to promote the industry of his State at home and its external relations with Bombay in particular. The passage of the chief line of railway from Bombay to the Ganges through his dominions removed any compunctions he may have felt about the energetic prosecution of a commercial policy. If his views were not always the soundest or the most enlightened in fiscal matters, his conduct of affairs was marked by energy, and he was always assiduous in his attention to business. When other Princes were devoting their thoughts and time to military promenades or the amusements of a Court, he was endeavouring to develop the opium cultivation in his State and to adjust the incidence of taxation so that it might be most beneficial for himself and least injurious, let us hope, to his people. The imposition of transit dues fell heavily on traders, particularly on those engaged in trade relations between places separated from each other by Holkar's territory, but transit dues were not invented by Holkar. He only adopted a prevailing custom, and might in the course of time have been persuaded to abandon them. A more reprehensible practice was the assertion of the influence of the Durbar in matters of litigation, when frequently no effort was spared to represent the success of the Maharajah as the triumph of justice. But regarded on the whole, and especially when compared with other Native chiefs, the administration of Maharajah Holkar must be considered more than fairly competent and incorrupt. It had its faults, but it also had great merits. The people were not very much discontented, thanks to the exceptional fertility of their soil, and the State Exchequer became exceedingly well filled. If an attempt were made to estimate the extent of Holkar's coffers we should have to go into a very large sum indeed. Although Holkar for financial reasons expended very much less money on his army than his neighbour Scindiah, he still devoted considerable attention to the subject and was particularly proud of his steam foundry and of the home-produced artillery with which he stocked his arsenal at Indore. His police corps of about 6,000 men have been described as particularly efficient, while his capital was also the residence of several thousand Afghan and Arab adventurers. In this respect it bears some resemblance to Hyderabad. The late Maharajah was a Knight Grand Commander of the Star of India, and was present at the Delhi ceremonial when the Queen was proclaimed Empress of India, on which occasion he and his neighbour Scindiah were gazetted generals in the English army. He had also had a varied experience of Indian statesmen from an intimate acquaintance with a long line of remarkable agents in Central India, from Sir Robert Hamilton to Sir Lepel Griffin, and he had acquired an instinctive caution and a power of self-restraint which were a certain guarantee against any serious indiscretion. His death is for this reason matter of some solicitude as well as personal regret. It tends to break up the old condition of things in the Mahratta country, and were anything to happen to Maharajah Scindiah, who has long been suffering from illness, a most grave responsibility would be thrust upon the Government of India. The sense of this responsibility is increased by the fact that, whereas Scindiah's heir is a child, Holkar's eldest son Prince Shivaji Rao is believed to be a soft and amiable young man who may not be able to hold his own against his younger but turbulent brother, the Bala Sahib, whose enormities have already been the cause of serious disturbance in Indore and the subject of just complaint by ourselves. The death of Maharajah Tukaji Rao is not only to be lamented in itself, but on public grounds as the possible precursor of more serious events in the future. We cannot reasonably expect the next holder of the proud title of Holkar to be as capable and astute as the man who has just died, and the shortcomings of a Native court always provide much anxiety and trouble for the Supreme Government. The chief element of disturbance promises to centre around the acts of Bala Sahib, and so far as our information goes there seems no reason to doubt, if his pernicious influence were removed, that Prince Shivaji Rao, the new Maharajah Holkar, would prove a well-intentioned and trustworthy ruler.

GENERAL HUGHES'S FUNERAL.

The Commander-in-Chief and Staff, with various officers of Army Head-quarters and the Military Department, assembled at General Hughes's house when the funeral procession started at 7.30 A.M., on the 25th May. On the ridge near the Church were many other civil and military officers, who fell in as the corège passed on to the Mall. A fatigue party of the Royal Irish Regiment were in advance, then the firing party, marching with arms reversed, with the Viceroy's band close behind them; next the bier covered with white roses and borne by Native bearers, while immediately in rear was all military Simla in various uniforms, with here and there a blackcoated civilian. A number of soldiers of the Royal Irish who had come voluntarily as mourners closed the procession, which was watched by a large number of Natives.

The corège coming down the Mall at a very slow pace to the "Dead March" was joined by the Viceroy and Staff and the Executive Council and many others below the Club, where the road begins to descend from the Mall to the cemetery, and here the whole party for a moment stood uncovered. From this point the Viceroy followed immediately after the bier alone, his Council including the Chief, following close in his rear down the steep path to the cemetery. The band had ceased playing, but when the entrance was neared the strains of the "Dead March" again arose. On arrival at the Lich gate the procession was met by the chaplain, the Rev. W. H. Tribe, and about fifteen ladies in deep mourning, including Lady Roberts and Mrs. and Miss Hughes, and here the coffin was covered with the Union Jack, and the sword and helmet of the deceased officer placed upon it. The Native bearers transferred the bier to the fatigue party, the Viceroy and Council forming up on each side, and accompanying it uncovered to the grave. Mr. Tribe read the funeral service, and the coffin was lowered, and then the usual three volleys were fired, the troops were marched away, and the sad gathering dispersed.

MR. WILFRED BLUNT.—It is amusing to notice that Mr. Wilfred Blunt has been distinguishing himself in Ireland by precisely a similar procedure to that which he followed in India. He went ostentatiously to Ireland proclaiming that he proposed to study the Irish question and the relations between landlords and tenants; that he would examine the question on the spot, and that he would absolutely refuse to hold any communication with any official, directly or indirectly, connected with the Castle, or with anyone of the landlord class or their employés. The consequence was as might be expected. As in India, the long ears of Mr. Wilfred Blunt were filled with idle tales from every discontented and seditious person, so in Ireland he became the equally credulous receptacle for the extravagant romances which the Irish peasantry know so well how to create. All these, received by the simple Mr. Blunt as Gospel truth, have been solemnly reproduced in the Pall Mall Gazette by him, amidst the laughter of all intelligent persons and the overwhelming refutation of every statement he had advanced. Mr. Blunt's system of inquiry, followed by him with such ignominious results in Egypt, in India, and in Ireland, cannot be recommended for the adoption of political students.—Pioneer.

SEPOYS CHEERS.—The English army, in addition to its other virtues, is the only one which knows how to cheer. Frenchmen shriek, Italians howl, Russians roar or sing as the case may be, and Germans shout on occasions of excitement. The Englishman takes the trouble—being born of a methodical people—to articulate a distinct "hurrah," which sound is known on the Continent as "Le British 'Oorai." A correspondent is at some pains to point out that the Englishman's attempt to make the Native army cheer as he himself cheers, leads to strange and awful noises on State occasions such as the Queen's Birthday. "No wonder," says he, "that the Adjutant's horse, who has stood the trying ordeal of the feu de joie, sits down on its haunches in an agony of fear, while the Adjutant himself, mindful of the regimental parade on the previous day, when he rehearsed the cheering 'by numbers,' abandons himself to tears. I am certain that Jack Sepoy, as he marches home to his lines, brackets the morning's performance with keeping step, the regulation 'stand at ease' and other, to him, inexplicable shouks of the Sirkar." This seems to us hardly correct. Jack Sepoy has a fair notion that across the seas lives the Maharani of England, in whose honour the Englishman assembles once a year and shouts; and, at all other seasons, stands uncovered while a hymn in her honour is being played. Jack Sepoy loyally shouts with his white brother-in-arms, but all the regulations on earth cannot elicit a cheer from him, seeing that his throat is not made for the performance any more than for the singing of canteen and barrack-room songs. Thomas Atkins cheers lustily on slight provocation; but the races from whence the Sepoy is drawn do not lift up their voices except under the influence of direct personal excitement. Then they yell lustily; but the key-notes of the national cries are different. The larynx, not the loyalty, of the Sepoy, is his weak point.—Civil and Military Gazette.

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Ceremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D. M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary
of the Church Missionary Society,
Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Muhammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary World.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr.
Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of the Arabs; and the volume before us, as the work of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopædia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammadan
religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism
as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . . We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Muslim faith, the information being in every case
taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources,
with the comments of the best European scholars. . . .
This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Homeward Mail.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF
 INDIA.

There are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb,
 and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals
 throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterized by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth;
 but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire,
 comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY,

1, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Established 1834, by Special Act of Parliament.

Subscribed Capital, £500,000.

DIRECTORS.

JOHN FARLEY LEITH, Esq., Q.C., Chairman. | W. N. NICHOLSON, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

ANNUAL BONUS POLICIES. THEIR SPECIAL ADVANTAGES.

I.—Economy of Premium at Outset of Assurance.

The Premium charged by the "UNIVERSAL," on the Policy being effected, and irrespective of reductions by Cash Bonus annually after six payments, has always been from 5 to 10 per cent. lower than the average scale of Premiums charged by such few other Life Offices that divide Bonuses every year. The rates of the "UNIVERSAL" are also more economical than those of the average of Offices declaring Bonuses only once every five years.

II.—Low Rates of Premium Reduced by Annual Cash Bonus.

The practice of an Annual Division of Profits has long been considered by leading authorities to be the most just and regular that can be adopted. Its success in the case of the "UNIVERSAL" has been shown in more than half a century's experience, by enabling returns of Premium to be made to the assured averaging upwards of 45 per cent. of the original rates charged, thus practically reducing the average outlay for the Policy to 55 per cent., or 11s. in the pound, of the contract rates stipulated to be paid.

III.—Large Reversionary Bonuses Annually Added.

The sum allotted to each Policy at the Yearly Division of Profits may be applied either in reduction of the current year's Premium, or in annual augmentation of the amount assured, by the addition to the Policy of such Reversionary Bonus as each year's return of premium will assure as a Single Premium at the then age.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1886.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE overland mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 8th June; from Allahabad to the 6th June; and from Calcutta and Madras to the 5th June.

THE punitive expedition against the Kachyens has ended successfully, and the offending Tsawbwa has apologised and sent in his gun and dah as tokens of submission.

It is stated that the Government of India has granted a concession for working the ruby mines in Upper Burma to an Englishman backed by a strong French syndicate with a sprinkling of English names.

THE Mandalay correspondent of a Calcutta paper says that during the recent expedition against the Kachyens, one man was wounded on our side. About twenty Kachyens were killed and several others wounded.

A BURMESE Amazon, twenty years old, is reported to be leading a rebel party in the Tonghu district.

AN outbreak has occurred among the convicts at the Bassim jail. Four convicts were killed.

COLONEL LOCKHART has crossed the Hindu Kush, and will travel along the slope, entering Kafiristan from the north.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL BELL, V.C., Deputy Quartermaster-General in charge of the Intelligence Branch, has returned to Simla after adding another to his journeys of exploration.

THERE is a probability of the thirteen batteries in our 1st Army Corps in India receiving the new breech loading gun during the current year, the Military Department supporting the Commander-in-Chief's view expressed at Delhi as to the urgent necessity of the re-armament.

COLONEL COLLEN has been appointed to act for Colonel Newmarch as Military Secretary, while the latter is officiating in Council. Captain Anderson and Major Robertson will carry on the work in the Military Accounts Branch during Colonel Collen's absence.

TWO committees, of each of which Colonel Lewis will be President, are likely to assemble before long at Simla, one to consider the equipment of the Sappers and Miners; the other on loading transport animals.

NEWS from Kabul, dated ten days ago, announced the Amir to be in good general health, though his gout was troublesome.

THE QUEEN's letter to the Ameer, conferring the G.C.S.I., has been received at Kabul, where it was read in open Durbar, and afterwards suspended at the Kotwali for the people to read.

THE telegram regarding the arrest of Mr. Stephens, the bicyclist, in Afghan territory, is dated from Kassawa Kali, near Maimena. It is not said by whom he was arrested.

THE Government of India have ordered inquiry to be made into the alleged misconduct of the new Punjabi police in Burma.

COLONEL DE BOURBEL has been appointed to survey the several routes which may appear practicable for a railway into Cashmere, the Maharajah having expressed a desire that his State may be placed in direct communication with the Indian Railway system.

At least four routes will have to be examined, it is stated; but the work is expected to be completed this season. Colonel de Bourbel's task will be to select the most favourable line, and submit an estimate of the cost of a railway by that route.

IN the Calcutta customs export list a new departure in the wheat trade of India is chronicled, fifty tons of wheat having been passed out for Adelaide by the British India Company's steamer Rajputana, which is now loading for Australia.

SYUD AMEER HOSSEIN, Presidency Magistrate, Northern Division, Bengal, has been appointed a member of the Supreme Legislative Council. The Syud has been in the service of Government for the past twenty-five years, and was a member of the Bengal Legislative Council during the period 1878-80.

DHULKEEP SINGH has formally declared his intention of leaving for England forthwith. The Maharajah was some days ago reinitiated into the Sikh brotherhood by one of his cousins and another Sikh priest who had arrived at Aden.

THE Boundary Commission is supposed to be now on the Oxus, but the actual news of their arrival there has not yet been received.

THE cost of the migration of the Supreme Government to and from Simla is roughly estimated at five lakhs. Out of this sum, however, Government repays itself through the railway fares over the lines which are now its own property to the extent of about two lakhs. Thus, it is represented that the actual expenditure of the exodus amounts to three lakhs.

THE latest ascertained earnings of the Rajputana-Malwa Railway are at the rate of close on Rs. 300 per mile per week over the whole 1,400 miles of line—a first-class performance.

A SHOCKING murder was committed a few nights ago at Kandiwalla, in the Dera Ghazi Khan district. Mahomed Khan, the Loond Chief, was found murdered in his bed. His half-brother is believed to be concerned in the murder, and is in custody. Colonel Plowden, the Deputy Commissioner, and Mr. Rawlins, the District Superintendent of Police, are on the spot inquiring into the case.

A CORRESPONDENT writes from Sultanpore to announce that the man-killing elephant, whose doings were recently related, has been poisoned. The Natives are said to have a belief that an elephant cannot be put to death with poison, but a large dose of arsenic administered to the animal proved fatal—in three-and-a-half days.

THE Bank of Bombay has raised its minimum rate of interest on loans to nine per cent.

AT the end of the last official year there were twenty-two jute mills at work in Bengal employing 51,902 persons. The nominal capital of the mills worked by Joint Stock Companies was 270 lakhs.

MR. J. W. QUINTON has been summoned to Simla in connection with the Oudh Rent Bill.

THE Secretary of State is now said to have declined to grant a special pension to Dr. Leitner.

THE Birthday Ball, postponed from May 26th, took place at the Viceregal Lodge, Simla, on Tuesday. There was the usual large attendance.

COLONEL ROSS left Simla on Wednesday last for Hyderabad.

REFERRING to the depreciation of silver, and the amount of gold imported to, and absorbed in, this country—a sixth of the world's supply—a correspondent states that "on dit" that there are immense vaults under the Maharajah's palace in Burdwan, full of gold, which, owing to some superstition, can neither be appraised nor used, and also, it is reported that sixty lakhs of rupees have been buried by a Rajah in the Madras Presidency."

Notes of the Week.

HER MAJESTY has signified her intention to confer the honour of knighthood on Mr. John Edge, Q.C., who is about to leave for India as Chief Justice of the High Court of the North-West Provinces.

THE latest news received by telegraph from Upper Burma is serious. It appears that at Beclin, between the Moulmein and the Siamese frontier, a large Chino-Siamese trading caravan entered the town. The alarm was given that they were dacoits, and the inhabitants fled. The sepoy guard turned out and attacked the caravan, and killed several peaceable Chinese traders before the mistake was discovered. There were no European officers with the Sepoys. This affair has caused much excitement among the Chinese community, and it is feared that it will interfere with trade with China. Not only this, but it may give the Chinese authorities encouragement to throw further difficulties in the way of coming to any satisfactory settlement of disputed matters on the frontier.

WHY the Sepoy guard should have attacked a trading caravan is somewhat unintelligible. An undisciplined soldiery might do so for the purpose of loot, but the boast of the Madras military authorities is that the Sepoys they have sent to Upper Burma are under the most perfect control as regards discipline. The paucity of European officers with the Sepoy battalions has been a misfortune from the commencement of the Expedition. It could not be expected, however, that every Native guard should be commanded by a European officer; the Native non-commissioned officer should have been able to have kept his men in hand. But perhaps the "Sepoys" who are blamed were really the Burmese police levies, about whose efficiency all evil reports have been prevalent.

THE telegram further states that the insurgents near Myingyan have killed Mr. Bruce, an employé of the Bombay-Burma Company, and three of his followers, and that the condition of Upper Burma continues to be very unsatisfactory, numerous petty engagements with the insurgents being continually reported. It is quite clear that the annexation of Upper Burma has not been the pleasant "Alice-in-Wonderland" business as Mr. Grant Duff, in his happy-go-lucky way, described it to be in his speech at the Birthday dinner at Madras. He declared that the business had been finished off with the neatness and finality of an epigram, and he quoted Aristotle in proof of fortune being always kind to those who deserve success. Fortune, however, has hitherto considered the deserving to be—the Dacoits.

A BOMBAY contemporary, in commenting upon the Birthday Gazette honours, does no more than justice to one of the recipients in writing that "Mr. Pedder's claims to a Companionship of the Order had been established even before he entered upon the Secretaryship of the Revenue Department at the India Office. His services in this Presidency, in the Collectorate of Khandeish, in the Secretariat, and in the Municipal Commissionership, were really valuable. It is natural that we in Bombay should think that his best work was done here, but it would not be easy to overrate the value of the thorough administrative reorganisation which he effected in the Municipality. It is remembered of him, too, that his work in the Mofussil was marked by much sympathy with the cultivating class, and that in the Secretariat he showed all the best qualities of a liberal administrator."

It must be hoped by all true friends of India that in the coming Parliament Mr. J. M. Maclean, Sir R. Temple, Sir R. Lethbridge, and those Anglo-Indian gentlemen who look on Indian questions in the light of long personal and practical experience of them in the country itself, will still keep their seats. If the silvery voice of Sir George Campbell fails to again charm the electors of Kirkcaldy, charm he never so wisely, the loss will no doubt be felt in the House, but it must bear the blow. Better, however, the pessimism of Sir George than that of Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, whose election, according to the truthful assurance of Mr. Michael Davitt, will rejoice the hearts of 200 millions of the people of India. It may rejoice some of the demagogues of West Finsbury, but the millions of India are as little concerned about an amicable Parsee gentleman who has been an absentee from his country for twenty years as about Mr. Davitt himself.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(BY TELEGRAPH.)
(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 20.

The most important event of the past week in this country was the death of Tuckaji Rao Holkar, Maharajah of Indore, which occurred at his capital on Thursday morning at eleven o'clock. The event was not unexpected, as like Scindia, the other great Mahratta chief, Holkar had been in a critical state of health for some time.

The most remarkable fact about the late Maharajah's character—wherein he showed a marked contrast to the generality of Indian Princes—was his strong practical business ability. He acted as his own Finance Minister, and showed himself a most industrious, if somewhat hard, ruler.

He leaves two sons. The elder, Shivaji Rao Holkar, was invested with the powers of administration during his father's illness and now succeeds him.

The Viceroy on hearing the news telegraphed his condolence to the family.

The state of Scindia's health continues to cause great anxiety. He is now at Cawnpore, where he went after a short stay at Bithoor. He is said to be very frail, and it is stated that his bathing in the Ganges has increased his illness. It is believed to be his intention to proceed on a pilgrimage to Benares or Bindraban. It is to be regretted that, like Holkar, Scindia refuses to consult European physicians, and prefers to trust to Native practitioners and astrologers.

A cyclonic storm formed in the Bay of Bengal in the early part of last week, struck the coast near Saugor Island on Wednesday morning, and passed in a north-westerly direction through Midnapore towards Chota Nagpore and Behar. So far no news has been received that any damage has been done, and as the storm was not one of great force it is not likely to have caused much injury. On the other hand, it has done good by bringing a plentiful rainfall and by apparently fairly establishing the monsoon rains.

The Government has thought it necessary to give a direct contradiction to the rumour, which has been current for some time past, that Mr. Hardie, the only non-official member of the Finance Committee, had resigned owing to his constantly finding himself outvoted by his official colleagues. The contradiction states that the proceedings taken by the Committee have been adopted unanimously in every case, and that hitherto any differences of opinion among the members have been eliminated by discussion. It goes on to deny that Mr. Hardie ever demanded the addition of more non-official members, or asserted that an impartial examination of the finances was impossible with a purely official Committee. Mr. Hardie, it is added, has no intention of leaving the Committee, although he may not accompany it during part of its proposed tour. It is evident from the fact of this contradiction having been telegraphed to every Indian newspaper that the Government fully appreciates how serious would have been the loss to the Committee had it been deprived of Mr. Hardie's services, and it is to be hoped that the happy unanimity which appears to have marked the Committee's deliberations thus far may continue till the end.

The Bengal Government, at the suggestion of the Chamber of Commerce, has under consideration the advisability of increasing the number of signal stations on the Hooghly, so as to have them at Saugor Island, Mud Point, Culpee, Diamond Harbour, Fisherman's Point, Atchepore, Budge Budge, and Garden Reach, with telegraphic communication between Saugor and the Eastern Channel lights. Should the proposal be adopted it will result in a great advantage to shipping as well as to the mercantile community of Calcutta.

It is satisfactory to learn from an up-country newspaper that the construction of the Scinde Nagar strategical frontier railway is making rapid progress. A section 90 miles long has been laid from Shen Shah, opposite Mooltan, on an alignment parallel with the left bank of the Indus. The rails are being laid at the rate of three miles daily. The Scinde-Pishin railway will, it is said, owing to financial pressure, not to be carried for the present past Shah Ahmed, the site of the proposed intrenched camp, but an iron bridge will be thrown across the Lora river in front of that position. It is possible that the delay may prove beneficial, if it has the result of procuring a more thorough examination than has yet been made into the respective merits of the tunnel scheme and of the Khojah alternative route by Muskhi, which, although longer, would avoid the difficulties of the Khojah range.

Last Thursday a Calcutta newspaper stated, on the authority of a Cashmere correspondent, that Colonel Lockhart and his party had been seized and imprisoned in Badakshan. The Government of India had received, however, no confirmation of the report. The real facts are now stated to be these:—Colonel Lockhart, on his arrival at Kila Punjab, on the southern branch of the Oxus, was stopped, as the Governor of Badakshan had no orders about giving him supplies. The required orders were afterwards received, and the party intended to move on June 1 to Zibah, 50 miles to the south-east of Fyzabad. Thence Colonel Lockhart will either go westwards along the slopes of the Hindoo Koosh, or cross by the Dorah Pass to Chitral, as circumstances may dictate.

The Tibet mission is now at Darjeeling, ready to start. The mules and followers are encamped on the Lebong spur, about 1,000 feet below that station. The reason for the delay is unknown. It is to be hoped that no further time may be lost, as the season is now well advanced.

The recent death at the hands of dacoits of Mr. Phayre, Deputy Commissioner of Minhla, affords another sad proof of the utter inefficiency of the present arrangements in the new province. The fact that the chief civil officer of a district is obliged to take the field against dacoits personally and without any other European shows how miserably inadequate was the staff with which he was supplied, especially as regards policemen. One of the gravest mistakes yet committed is the appointment to the command of the police of the united provinces of a gentleman whose tenure of office as Inspector-General of Police in Lower Burma can hardly have been pronounced a success; and to this mistake much of the subsequent disorder would seem to be due. There can be no doubt that both provinces are in a thoroughly unsatisfactory condition, and it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that no improvement can be expected till the whole system of administration has undergone a radical change.

Unpleasant rumours continue to reach us regarding the Ameer's health. It seems to be certain that he is far from well, and that he has been obliged to give up the holding of public durbars. He is said to have nominated Sirwar Khan, his son by a slave girl, to succeed him in the event of his death.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 17.

Lieutenant Parsons, Assistant Commissioner of Allammyo, and Mr. Dobson, Superintendent of Police, were both severely wounded on the 15th inst. when attacking the insurgents at the village of Zeni, ten miles to the north of the old frontier. A strong body of Shans and Burmans held the village, which was stockaded. Lieut. Parsons and Mr. Dobson, with a body of Madras Sepoys and Burmese policemen, advanced across some paddy fields and attempted to carry the village. Two of the Sepoys were killed by the insurgents' fire, whereupon part of the Sepoys and all the Burmese police fled, abandoning their officers. The Sepoy jemadar behaved admirably, but his men refused to follow him. The two Englishmen, after being wounded, vainly endeavoured to rally the Sepoys, and displayed great courage.

Detailed information has been received from Bhamo as to the retreat of the column recently sent against the Kachyen Tsinbwa. The officer commanding the column wished, for military reasons, to burn certain villages on the line of advance, fearing that they would afford cover to the enemy in attacking the column on its return. Major Croke, the civil officer at Bhamo, refused to sanction this step, stating that it would probably cause a general rising of the Kachyens. The commanding officer then objected to advance further, owing to this difference of opinion; and, as the troops were greatly exhausted by exposure to the rain, Tsinbwa's apology was accepted. In his letter, Tsinbwa said that if he offended again he hoped his head would be cut off with a dah. The result of this expedition has caused much dissatisfaction, as the column was harassed when retreating and fired upon till it reached the plains.

RANGOON, JUNE 20.

On the 12th inst. Captain Dunsford, of the 2nd Bengal Infantry, and Lieutenant Wynyard, with forty rifles of the King's (Liverpool Regiment), attacked 500 Dacoits at Salen, on the western bank of the river, fifty miles north of Minhla. The Dacoits were driven out, but Captain Dunsford was killed, and three men of the Liverpool Regiment were wounded. These Dacoits formed part of the force of Bosweh, who recently killed Mr. Phayre.

Lieutenant Huggins, of the 21st Madras Infantry, on the 12th inst. routed a large body of insurgents at Gau, twenty miles to the north of Salen. Ninety-two insurgents, including five bohs, or officers, were killed, and many prisoners, including four bohs, were captured.

The country continues to be very disturbed. The present condition of Upper Burma is largely due to the want of sufficient civilian staffs.

THE AFGHAN FRONTIER COMMISSION.

ON THE OXUS, JUNE 18.

The frontier has been traced and pillars have been erected up to a point within a few miles of the Oxus. No new questions have been left unsettled.

The only pending question is that regarding Khoja Saleh, and this must be determined between the two Cabinets, as apparently the Russian Commissioner is not authorised to deal with it. The disputed area is about fifty square miles in extent. The district is admitted by the Bokharans to be Afghan territory, and to have been in Afghan possession for thirty-five years. No military considerations are involved.

It is probable that the Joint Commission will now be dissolved, an officer being left to carry out the decision arrived at.

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.—Arrangements have been made for the examination in the Indian Court of certain commercial products, which are believed to be insufficiently known or to be suitable for new purposes. Among the substances which will be examined are fibres, silk and silk substitutes, drugs, tobacco, gums and resins, minerals, oils, oil-seeds and perfumery, dyes, mordants and pigments, timbers, tanning materials and leather, and food-stuffs. Any visitors to the Exhibition, who are interested in the subject, will be permitted to attend these examinations of products, which will take place in the commercial room, attached to the Economic Court, where all further information may be obtained. Should the results of this examination render such a course desirable, conferences of a formal character will probably be held at a later date.

A CRIMINAL case, in which an unfortunate Brahmin widow, by name Radhabai, was charged with exposing or leaving her newly-born child with the intention of abandoning it under sec. 317 of the Penal Code was brought up before Mr. H. Davis, second assistant to the Agent Governor-General for Central India. The prosecution was conducted by the Railway Police, and the widow was defended by Mr. Khory. After hearing the evidence tendered by the prosecution, the magistrate discharged the woman at once. The following facts of the case have been collected from the evidence offered:—Radhabai belongs to a respectable Brahmin family, and her husband having died about five years ago she was living in her brother-in-law's house at one of the railway stations of the Rajputana-Malwa Line. About a month and a-half ago she was safely delivered of a child in her friend's house; and, after having nursed it for about twenty days, she, under the dread of excommunication, handed over the child to a female friend of hers with a good sum of money for its support, and returned to her brother-in-law's house. After a few days the female friend who was entrusted with the care of the child became seriously ill, and, being unable to attend to the wants of the child, she passed it on to her friend, who, having had no children herself, gladly accepted the charge, and expressed her desire to adopt it. The child was, however, attacked with pneumonia. It was brought to Mhow for medicine, and all means were adopted to restore it to its original health, but nothing could save the poor child. Its death becoming known to the Railway Police, inquiries were instituted, and Radhabai and others were placed on their trial with the result we have given above.

A NEW MAHDI.—A Bangalore paper says:—"The Madras Railway Company appear to be doing a roaring trade in consequence of the appearance at a station called Ulli, between Goodiatum and Mailputtee, of a Mahomedan, through whose instrumentality, it is reported, some wonderful cures have been wrought. We give the story of this Mahdi as communicated to us. The Mahdi, it would appear, in the middle of last month, called over to the village Ulli, where he asked a villager for some water to drink. The villager seeing that the applicant was a wayfarer, gave him some butter-milk. Prior to his departure the traveller informed the villager that the latter would in two days be visited by a tiger. He desired that the tiger should be killed, and the skin preserved until he returned. The villager having promised to comply with the request, the Mahomedan left after receiving a piece of cloth from his generous host. As prophesied, two days after, Master Sripes put in an appearance and was killed, and the skin concealed. After an interval of five days the Mahomedan put in an appearance, but was first told that no tiger had been seen in the village. The Mahomedan disbelieved the story, and taking his host by the hand proceeded to the spot where the skin was concealed. He forgave the villager for telling him an untruth, and asked him for the skin, in recompense for which he presented him with a vial containing the milk of some herb, which he said would cure every disease flesh is heir to. He further desired the villager to daily substitute with water the quantity of the liquid used from the bottle. The Mahomedan then disappeared, and has not been heard of since. The villager put to the test the infallible remedy in his possession and effected several cures in the village. The matter soon got bruited abroad, and hundreds of people of all castes, creeds, and colours, are now seen flocking to the sanctuary of the villager. Very lately, the crowd proceeding from Bangalore was so great that it was found necessary to add eleven extra carriages to the mail train."

TRADE WITH BURMA.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Almost ever since the annexation of Upper Burma we have heard so much of dacoity—not only in our newly-acquired territory but also in Lower Burma—that one is apt to imagine the internal trade of the country must have been almost paralysed. Such, however, is far from being the case. The magnificent steamers of the Irrawaddy Flotilla Company, with their roomy barges, which ply between Rangoon and Mandalay, carry up full cargoes of salt from Liverpool, piece goods and other merchandise imported by sea; bringing back kutch, hides, horns, and other commodities for export to Europe; whilst the steamers on the Bhamo line carry up large quantities of salt from Liverpool, bales of cotton from Myingyan, eighty miles below Mandalay, numerous cases of matches from Norway, piece goods from Manchester and Bombay, with a few small parcels of the edible bird's nest so dear to the Chinese bon vivant. Their return cargo mainly consists of yellow orpiment, sulphur, jade stone, and indiarubber. Moreover, ever since annexation, the shipments of rice from Lower to Upper Burma have been slowly but steadily increasing; thus in March and April of the present year the quantity shipped amounted respectively to 6,280 and 6,710 tons against 5,938 tons in April 1885. Whilst Lower Burma has been sending rice to Upper Burma, the exports of wheat from the Upper to the Lower province show a still more marked improvement. Thus, while the exports of wheat for the three first months of last year only amounted to 4,000 maunds, the quantity shipped during the first three months of the current year was 19,000. It is owing to this marked improvement in the wheat trade during these three months that the total quantity exported during the official year of 1885-86 is so much in excess of the exports in 1884-85; for while the exports during the latter year amounted to only 69,000 maunds, they amounted in the former to 97,000 maunds; and this is said to be the largest quantity ever recorded to have been exported in a year. In the opinion of all capable of forming a judgment on the subject, the soil of Upper Burma is admirably adapted for the growth of wheat. Wheat from Upper Burma, or as it is called in Rangoon, Mandalay wheat, is in great demand in Lower Burma; both the Burmese and Chinese considering it to be much superior to the wheat from Bengal, and there is every reason to hope that, under our rule, the wheat trade of Upper Burma will rapidly expand.

BENGAL.

WITH reference to the recent post-office robbery at Calcutta, suggestions have been made for the employment of police detectives in the department, as was done in the years 1872 and 1873, when Mr. T. Smith, of the Punjab police, was employed for the special purpose of detecting or investigating post-office robberies.

A PETITION of the unemployed European mechanical engineers in Calcutta is being circulated for signature previous to its despatch to Government. It sets forth their grievances and hardships and their remedy. "It is impossible," a Calcutta paper adds, "in the present state of trade, for the European mechanic, with so many natives of India pitted against him, to make headway in this country, where cheapness, not efficiency, is the order of the day; and it is with a view to meet this state of things that the petition has been drawn up."

At a meeting of the unemployed held recently in Calcutta, a curious statement was made by one of the speakers, Mr. Pearson. He said that a short time back some vacancies occurred in one of the departments, and he was called upon to examine the candidates. The applicants numbered about 300, mostly B.A.'s, M.A.'s, and F.A.'s, of the Calcutta University. The examination was most simple,—composition, dictation, simple arithmetic and geography. Out of the 300 applicants examined only thirty-eight succeeded in passing, and not one of this number was a graduate of the University.

MADRAS.

A STRANGE SEASON REPORT.—A Bangalore paper states that the Deputy Commissioner of Kadur has been requested to explain how both the large and small tanks of the taluqs in his district were shown, in the season reports for January and February, as having received a supply of water by rain, when there was no rainfall at all reported in the whole district during those months.

DIAMONDS IN MADRAS.—Some valuable diamonds were found recently in the Madras Presidency at a place called Nadjra Karna, Bellary district. It appears that this place was famous for the production of diamonds in former times, and that there are traces of old diggings still to be found to the west of the town. Mr. Orr, the well-known jeweller of Madras, and Mr. Abraham, a diamond merchant and cutter of Bellary, state that they have both purchased frequently, within the last few years, diamonds said to have been found at Nadjra Karna, or in the neighbourhood. Mr. Orr now has, or very lately had, in his possession a diamond found at Nadjra Karna, valued at £10,000. All the diamonds, however, that have been found of late years have been discovered by accident on the surface and not by mining, and it still seems very doubtful whether mining operations would pay, as, according to Mr. Foote, of the Geological Survey, the conglomerate which once covered this locality has been washed away, leaving only a few scattered diamonds behind.

BOMBAY.

SIR FRANK SOUTAR arrived by this week's mail steamer, and has taken charge of his office as commissioner of police.

THE Simla Argus states that Mr. W. Webb, barrister at Bombay, and Major-General T. Thatcher, of the Bombay Retired List, sent in applications for the post of Prime Minister to the Begum of Bhopal. Her Highness forwarded both the applications to the Supreme Government. Mr. Webb has acted as Chief Presidency Magistrate of Bombay on three occasions.

THE EASTERN ELECTRIC LIGHT COMPANY.—All the stock-in-hand and goodwill of this company, which was started in Bombay about five years ago, and which was known under the name and style of the Eastern Electric Light and Power Company, was sold on Thursday evening. About two years ago the company, as first established, sold the property to Premchund Roychund, who did not, however, pay the value, and the property did not consequently pass from the hands of the original holders. Premchund Roychund started the business which he had secured under the name of the Bombay Electrical Company, and then made an attempt to dispose of it. He was frustrated, however, by an injunction taken out against him in the High Court by Mr. C. E. Ashburner, who is the appointed agent of the liquidators. The original owners, seeing no likelihood of obtaining the sum for which they had sold their property, put the same up for sale again on their premises in Moody Bay. An attempt was made by Premchund Roychund to prevent the sale, which was ineffectual. The stock-in-hand and other material belonging to the company was estimated lately at three and a half lakhs of rupees, whilst it is said that they calculate on getting something like Rs.5,00,000 for the property, portions of which are at Lahore and other parts of India, where the company has branches.

OBITUARY.

MAHARAJAH SCINDIAH.

The death of Maharajah Holkar has been very speedily followed by that of Maharajah Scindiah. Of the two, Maharajah Scindiah was both the more important political and the more interesting character. Since the extinction of the title or office of Peishwa, Scindiah has been allowed by general consent the foremost place among the Mahrattas, and the late holder of the name was entitled to it by his chivalrous disposition as well as by the traditions of his house, always the most gallant among the intrepid race which so nearly succeeded in securing the Empire of Delhi. Whereas Holkar was always anxious to be known as a good man of business, Scindiah only cared to appear as a soldier and leader of men, worthy in some degree of the traditions of the great warriors Ranoji and Mahadaji. The hardship of his fate as a feudatory of the Indian Empire was that it deprived his natural proclivities of free scope. His one battle was unfortunate, and during the thirty years that he enjoyed the command of an army this Mahratta prince could only play at soldiers.

Baji Rao, as he was called from the abbreviated form of his name Bhajeerut Rao, but more formally Jyajee Scindiah, the late Maharajah, was born in the year 1835, and was placed on the throne by our direct intervention in the year 1843, when, by the victories of Punniar and Maharajpur, we had effectually curbed the hostile spirit of the Mahrattas in Gwalior, and restored order to that State. The descendant of a race of warriors, he gave all his thoughts to military matters, and was content to leave in the hands of his able Ministers, Dinkur Rao and his successors, the work of civil administration. So far back as the year 1856 it was written of him by the Political Agent at his Court that he "seemed to enjoy no occupation save drilling, dressing, ordering, transforming, feasting, playing with his troops, and the unwearied study of books of evolutions; and he grudged no expenditure connected with this amusement." He preserved the same characteristic to the end of his life, and it will be easily understood with what anxiety his attitude was watched when, in the year following this account of his daily proceedings, the Mutiny broke out, and threatened the English Government with the gravest peril. What more natural, it was argued, than that a young and gallant prince, desirous above all things of indulging his martial instincts, should place himself at the head of the army he had re-created, and lead it against the foreign rulers? And but for the prudence and restraint of Dinkur Rao, "the just man" of the Mahrattas, it is possible that he would have obeyed the natural dictates of his age and of his blood. The representations of the Minister were supported by the personal influence of the English representative, Major Charters Macpherson, and when the insubordination of the native army revealed itself in open acts Scindiah, instead of throwing in his lot with the Mogul King of Delhi, or with Nana Sahib, the heir of the Peishwa, despatched his own body-guard, composed of "his companions by day and by night, inseparable from his pleasures and State," to Agra to assist us in holding that important place. The sincerity of his good will was shown still more clearly by his placing the English women and children in a safe abode under the shelter of his own palace, where it would have been well for them had they been allowed to remain. But the over-confidence fatal in so many other places called them back to the cantonments as a token of trust in the men, and when the Gwalior contingent rose several of these helpless Englishwomen were killed in the massacre that was perpetrated.

The position of Scindiah after the Gwalior Contingent had thrown off the mask was very peculiar. He was the friend and ally of the English, but the troops for which his revenues had been assigned were arrayed against them. Even his bodyguard had gone over to the mutineers, and the utmost that he and his Minister could do was to keep the army of the Durbar in a state of inaction. The natural difficulty of his position was increased by the circumstance that the town of Gwalior became the focus for many of the disaffected throughout Central India. Regiments that had thrown off their allegiance marched there from Indore, Malwa, and other places, and the young Maharajah was exposed to much personal danger. His popularity alone enabled him to restrain the ardour of his own troops, and the mutineers were kept in a state of inaction during many precious weeks of the summer of 1857. It was not, indeed, until the fall of Delhi that his own army broke loose from his control, when many of them hastened to abandon their prince and to place themselves under the orders of Tantia Topse and the Rani of Jhansi. Again was Scindiah left at liberty to proclaim his attachment to the British cause, while Rajput levies gave some degree of security to his person and his palace. Thus while the men of Gwalior were engaged in the field against Sir Colin Campbell and Sir Hugh Rose, their prince remained in inaction at his capital, but still as the avowed friend of the English. The hostility of his subjects did not, however, prevent his sending very timely aid in forage and provisions to the latter general while besieging the strong fort of Jhansi.

Scindiah was restored with some additional privileges and all his rights unimpaired over his State—a territory of great natural resources, with a population of nearly 3,000,000, and a revenue of about half that amount in pounds sterling. He was made a Knight Grand Commander of the Star of India, and his fidelity was further rewarded, at a later period with the rank of a general in the English army. Restored to his throne, but aged in many respects by the anxiety of the Mutiny time, Scindiah still devoted all his leisure to the improvement of his army. Whether he had any more definite motive in this than a desire to indulge his military instincts it is impossible to say; but the fact is alleged that he resorted to the plan of the Prussian Von Stein of passing his troops rapidly through the ranks, so that, while there were not more than 10,000 men with the colours, he could call up three or four times as many trained soldiers, if the necessity should ever arise. The opinion of the late Lord Lawrence about his army will be read with some interest. He wrote as follows, on the occasion of his visit to Gwalior in the year 1866:—"Scindiah has a large and well-equipped, and apparently well-organised force. In dress, drill, and equipment I have never seen anything like it at any court in India. Its numerical strength in guns, cavalry, and infantry far surpasses that of our force in the adjacent cantonment, and the way Scindiah handled them on parade was remarkable. I do not think that the men and horses are equal in physical appearance and warlike bearing to our Native troops, but still they look uncommonly well. Scindiah's troops are his hobby and delight. They are fairly paid and well cared for, and appear to be under proper discipline."

One grievance rankled in his mind, and that was that, while, after the Mutiny, we occupied our former cantonment, we also took possession of the fort of Gwalior. The garrison in that stronghold seemed in the eyes of the proud prince as a standing slight to his dignity, and to dwarf his authority in the eyes of his subjects. His views on this point received the sanction of his Minister, and Dinkur Rao considered that in this very matter the English Government had departed from its word. He is affirmed even to have gone so far as to say that we are not now true to our word. "Once your word was as if it were written on a stone tablet with an iron pen. Now I speak of it as a promissory note. You promise and do not fulfil." There was danger in such bitter disappointment as this, had not the cause of his discontent been removed by the restoration of the fort in the early part of the present year. All English testimony agrees that the late Maharajah was a gallant soldier, an accomplished gentleman in his address, and a distinguished chief in his bearing and demeanour.

Scindiah was not fortunate in his domestic affairs. Three of his sons, after being in turn proclaimed heir, died in succession, and in 1865 he was compelled to adopt his kinsman Ranoojee Scindiah as his son, and to proclaim him heir. This choice was ratified by the English Government. But whether impatient to grasp his prize, or impelled by some personal feeling, Ranoojee formed a plot in the year 1870 for the murder of the Maharajah. In this he was detected, and disgraced. The Maharajah revoked the decision that had been passed in his favour, and the English Government declared that it would never recognise him as ruler. But otherwise he was not punished, and may for all we know to the contrary be still living in Gwalior. The right was left with the Maharajah to adopt another heir "in accordance with the practice of his law and religion"; and the assurance was given him that the English Government would acquiesce in his selection. The necessity of adopting another heir was fortunately averted by the birth of a son to Scindiah in July, 1880, and this child now becomes his successor.

India in Parliament.

HOUSE OF LORDS, JUNE 21.

LORD KIMBERLEY, in moving to discharge the order for the appointment of a Select Committee on the Government of India, severely commented on the action of Lord Randolph Churchill, whom he accused of having obstructed and prevented the proposed inquiry.

LORD SALISBURY objected to the very unusual course taken by Lord Kimberley, and pointed out that the attack on Lord Randolph Churchill might have been made by the Under Secretary for India in that noble lord's presence. Further, he charged the Government with having failed to provide an opportunity for discussing in the House of Commons the number and composition of the Joint Committee. The motion was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 21.

MR. STAFFORD HOWARD made the usual Budget statement. At the outset he entered into an elaborate explanation of the change in the method of presenting the account, and passing then to the Budget and Revised Estimates for 1884-5 and 1885-6, he said the Budget provided a surplus of £647,000; but, owing to the Afghan frontier dispute and the Burmese war, there would be a deficit of £2,852,000, although a recent telegram from the Viceroy stated that this deficit would be reduced by about half a million. The revenue was estimated at £72,328,000, and it would probably amount to £73,601,000, while the expenditure, estimated at £71,681,000, will probably be increased to £76,453,000. The Revised Estimate was, therefore, worse than the Budget by £2,499,000. The capital outlay on buildings and irrigation was put at £5,516,000, giving a total expenditure in excess of revenue of £8,368,000, which has been met by borrowing to the extent of £2,924,000. Under "Political charges" there was an increase of £464,000, due to extra subsidies to the Ameer, to the expenses of the Rawul Pindi Durbar, and to the cost of the delimitation of the Afghan frontier; and under the Army there was an increase of £3,053,000, mainly owing to the cost of the military preparations in connection with the Afghan frontier dispute. As to the coming year, the revenue is estimated at £75,799,000 and the expenditure at £75,617,000, which was only about half a million below that of the previous year, both years being swelled by the extraordinary charges due to political events. The Budget for 1886-7 is altogether better than the revised Estimate of 1885-6 (which contemplated a deficit of over two millions) by £3,034,000. The year would close with a small surplus of £182,000; and in spite of the difficulties in Upper Burma, there was no reason to apprehend that this would not be realised. The great increase in the estimated revenue is due to the fact that the revenues of Upper Burma are included for the first time, and the accounts of the Scinde Railway are also included. Under the head of opium there is a net improvement of nearly three-quarters of a million. As to the expenditure, the most important items are under the heads of Army and Railways. The British troops have been increased in the last and this year, and the establishment is to be brought up to 69,764 men of all ranks, excluding officers, and the total cost of the additional British troops will be £675,000 in India and £150,000 at home. The Native army is to be increased by 11,968 men, and the total increased cost will be £360,000. In addition, a sum of £244,000 is to be spent on coast and harbour defences. The total expenditure on railways is £5,336,000, of which over three millions is for frontier railways, and the total amount spent on irrigation is £811,000. The present amount of the debt is £175,500,000, which is £14,500,000 more than in 1884-5. But in the same period the debt incurred for railways and irrigation works has increased by £22,000,000, so that the uncovered debt has absolutely decreased by £7,500,000. Putting assets in the shape of public works, railways, &c., at £208,179,000 and our total liabilities in the shape of debt at £254,556,000, our uncovered liabilities only amount to £51,377,000. The net percentage of the earnings of public works gives a return of 5.79 per cent. on the £150,346,000 of capital spent up to March 31 on railway construction, and the net return on irrigation works is 3.42 per cent. On the whole, he was of opinion that the financial condition of India was not entirely unsatisfactory.

In the discussion which followed this statement,

Lord R. CHURCHILL thought there was nothing in it to cause grave anxiety; the expenditure was not excessive, nor would it be necessary to resort to extra taxation. He complained that changes in the form of accounts were so often made, and hoped that no further change would become necessary. Dealing briefly with the figures which had been given, he contended the increase in the expenditure was only normal, and prophesied that the expenditure in years to come, especially for maintaining the army and improving the defences of the North-West Provinces, must be still further increased. On the other hand, he advocated economy in the Public Works Department, and, having asked for further information as to the petroleum wells and ruby mines in Upper Burma, expressed his hearty approval of the economy shown in connection with the Burmese expedition, which he considered was extremely creditable to the Indian Government.

Sir G. CAMPBELL dealt at considerable length with the question of Indian finance generally, and agreed with Lord R. Churchill that the increased expenditure would be permanent.

Mr. F. W. MACLEAN advocated the preparation of the accounts in rupees instead of in pounds, and argued that the increase of expenditure was not due to one party more than to another.

Mr. S. SMITH viewed with alarm the increase in the expenditure, and called attention to the extreme poverty of the majority of the Indian population.

Sir J. FERGUSSON defended the Indian administration against some strictures of Mr. S. Smith, whose information, he said, was of the most superficial character; and Mr. L. COHEN argued that the position of Indian finance afforded no ground for anxiety.

Sir R. FOWLER and Mr. EVERETT also spoke; and Mr. HOWARD having given a general reply, the usual resolutions were agreed to.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THROUGH THE BRITISH EMPIRE*

Were we asked, what career would be more likely than another to engender, in a man who might pursue it, that nice discrimination of persons and things without which the peregrinations of a traveller are as useless to himself as the account of them is unprofitable to others, we should unhesitatingly answer, the career of a diplomatist. That greatest of early Greek travellers, Ulysses, was no contemptible diplomat. Did he not procure the participation of Achilles, without whose help Troy was impregnable, in the Trojan war, claiming on that ground—so says Ovid—the merit of all that the hero had done?

A statesman who, like Baron von Hübner, has represented his native Austria with conspicuous ability, in the most difficult circumstances, at two such Courts as Rome and Paris, can be no ordinary man. Hübner's name is, too, historical; for to him it was that, on the memorable New Year's Day of 1859, Napoleon III. addressed the ominous words universally understood as adumbrating a renewal of the secular conflict between Austria and France which had but slumbered since 1815. Such a man can hardly have failed to have his powers of observation, however originally keen, made keener by experience.

Accordingly, we find in these volumes, not only the narrative of travel in every part of the British dominions, but very weighty observations, on political and social questions of all kinds, from points of view which are little likely to occur to any one possessing solely an English standard of comparison.

The British Empire! Let us, at a moment when the Cæon of the time is moving heaven and earth in order to compass the first step towards its disruption, see how its present grandeur has impressed a dispassionate foreign observer of no common order.

The first stage of the Baron's journey here recorded was the Cape, where, during his sojourn, he of course visited Cetewayo; seeing, too, something scarce less remarkable in the family of the Hugos, whose head, recently deceased at the age of ninety-three, was able to boast of no less than 292 direct descendants, of whom 211 were alive at the time. Australia and New Zealand, next visited, have been so often described that we only refer to them as giving rise to some very pertinent remarks on the shifting of power in the latter Colony, remarks probably not applicable to New Zealand alone. The "gentlemen," the first colonists, are very rapidly giving way to the "mob." "A Zealand nation," says our traveller, "is being formed. The Anglo-Saxon race will predominate, but it will comprise the elements of other nationalities, above all the German element, and this new people will bear the stamp of democracy." (I., 238). The author's remarks on the relations between England and the important group of Colonies which is comprised in the word Australia (I., 333-351), founded as they are on personal observation, and on information derived from prominent Colonial statesmen and others, will greatly interest the reader, and it is pleasant to be told, in words which the writer quotes with approval, "The Colonies are loyal; it is their interest to be so; and, what is more, they are loyal from the heart."

Our readers will be more especially concerned to know what impressions were made on a quick-witted observer—one, too, who, like Baron Hübner, has made Indian history a subject of study—by what he saw on his (first) visit to India, where (as, indeed, everywhere) he enjoyed the best possible opportunities of ascertaining facts, and of comparing the opinions of those best qualified to make accurate deductions from them. Travelling from Madras to Bombay, through Rajpootana to Delhi, and Peshawur, thence through the Punjab and North-West Provinces to Calcutta, winding up with a trip to Darjeeling, he may almost be said to have left no part of India unvisited: and, wherever he went, it was "with eyes and ears open." Naturally enough, he was particularly interested in the relations between the dominant, and the subject, races, and lost no opportunity of informing himself respecting them. No thoughtful man could, indeed, help asking, how it comes about that "a handful of civilians and sixty or seventy thousand English soldiers keep in check two hundred and fifty million Indians" (II. 5). The same query had occurred to his mind at Hyderabad (I. 411). The answer is, "prestige," that word so sneered at by Messrs. Blunt, Cotton, and the Baboos, and by their congeners at home. He is led to ask if prestige be an entity. "What is prestige?" And thus he answers his own query, "To my mind, if you succeed in inspiring me with an idea that you are stronger than I am, you exercise prestige over me. The less this conviction on my part is founded on reason, the deeper it is. If once it rises to the height of an article of faith, the prestige will be complete. So long as it is based on real superiority, prestige has nothing illusory about it: it becomes an illusion, when reality ceases to correspond with appearance."

For the Services, who give practical effect to the influence which "prestige" enables the Government to wield, the Baron has, we are glad to see, nought but praise. To take, first, our external relations, he presents us with a well-drawn sketch of the much-abused "Political" and his work (II. 75). "Here," he says, "are men, who combine the qualities of the hero, missionary of civilisation, politician, judge, soldier, and administrator, living constantly under a burning sky."

Of the Administrators in our own Provinces he speaks no less highly, though he is not blind to the deficiencies of our Administration, and is (II., 145) "fully alive to the want" of mutual understanding between Europeans and Natives, which is, he thinks, "one, perhaps the greatest, of the difficulties which the Administrators of India have to encounter."

The results achieved by our Universities and by the Education Department fail, we are sorry to say, to command his admiration. His experiences (I., 429; II., 19, &c.) led him to the conclusion that, while destroying the ancient beliefs of the Natives whom we so highly educate, we have given them "nothing instead; we have deprived them of the faculty of believing; we have converted them into Nihilists, into malcontents, and made them enemies of England;" an opinion confirmed by both Romanist and Anglican clergy in India.

All the information which our author gathered respecting the Native Press, to which (II., 235, &c.) he devotes some pages, was to the effect that it "even from a political point of view, exercises a bad influence on those who are able to read."

If the Native Press influences anything, it must be such "public opinion" as may exist. And this leads our author to the following weighty remarks (II. 247):—

"Is there any public opinion in India? It is declared that there is none. And yet people agree in saying that the Natives who have been educated in the State Colleges have become singularly importunate of late years, that they are beginning to adopt a high tone, and that they take especial delight in criticising the acts of the Government, which, unwisely, as it seems to me, encourage, if not provoke, such criticism. These Baboos and their newspapers, I am told, would only become dangerous at a crisis, and by a crisis is understood a disastrous European war. But the life of nations, like that of individuals, is nothing but a series of successes and reverses. Looked at from this point of view, the Baboo is not such an insignificant being as he seems to be considered."

Warmly praising and acknowledging (in a passage* which we commend to the notice of Mr. W. S. Blunt) the inestimable value of the presence of Englishwomen in India, Baron Hübner, after enumerating some of the benefits which we have conferred on our great Dependency, and observing "that the British India of our

* All the new conditions brought about by time, which restores while it destroys, have profoundly modified the social life of the Anglo-Indian; and have not only modified, but improved it morally, and made it better than ever it was before. Officers and civilians now obtain leave more frequently; they spend it in going to England, and return to India married men. It is the Englishwoman, courageous, devoted, well-educated, well-trained—the Christian, the guardian angel of the domestic hearth—who by her magic wand has wrought this wholesome transformation. (II., 156.)

days presents a spectacle which is unique, and without a parallel in the history of the world," thus concludes his remarks:—"And what has wrought all these miracles? The wisdom and the courage of a few directing Statesmen, the bravery and the discipline of a small number of Englishmen and a large number of Natives, led by heroes; and lastly, and, I will venture to say, principally, the devotion, the intelligence, the courage, the perseverance, and the skill, combined with an integrity proof against all temptation, of a handful of officials and magistrates who govern and administer the Indian Empire."

The conclusion to the second volume contains a retrospect, dated early this year, of the impression left on the Baron's mind by the relations between Great Britain and each of her dependencies: India naturally having a prominent place, its probable future being considered in the light of events which have happened since the termination of the author's trip. The assertion, that Herat is the Key of India, is somewhat summarily dismissed. "If," says the Baron, "Herat is really the Key of India, it is most unfortunate for England; for the Key is hanging at the enemy's gate: sitting at his window he has only to stretch out his hand to seize it." Hübner reproaches the surrender of Kandahar, "the outlying fortress of the unbroken barrier which Nature has erected for the defence of India." Yet he thinks us safe enough. He agrees with Shakespeare—

"Nought shall make us rue,
If England to herself will but be true."

"Had I," says our traveller, in the last sentence of his work, "to sum up the impressions derived from my travels, I should say: British rule is firmly seated in India. England has only one enemy to fear, herself." The italics are our own.

We have allowed India to delay us so long, that we must pass over the remainder of our traveller's excellent work far more cursorily than it deserves. The wide range of his wanderings renders it impossible closely to follow him. Nor did he, after leaving our great Oriental Dependency, visit any place, his remarks concerning which, however suggestive they may be, possess such exceptional value.

No one, scientist, statistician, or statesman, can peruse this most striking book without great profit: nor can even the average reader fail to see how "far a cry" it is from the jaunty narrative of the ordinary tourist to the present tale of thoughtful travel, with the well-considered remarks—original and instructive without being sententious—which give especial value to every part of the work.

THE INTERNATIONAL TELEGRAPH CONVENTION.*

The original Telegraph Convention was, as we see at page 7 of the present valuable manual, "done at St. Petersburg the 11th July, 1875." A ten years' experience of the working of that Convention (the provisions of which were of the most rudimentary character), and the extension of telegraphic communication to lands where, at the time of the St. Petersburg agreement, they were known only by name, necessitated the drawing up of much more minute regulations, including international telegraphic signals, and of a far more exhaustive tariff of charges.

A new Conclave, charged to devise, and to embody in suitable language, such new arrangements as might appear desirable, was, therefore, summoned last year. Its place of meeting was to be Berlin—henceforth, it would seem, destined to take the place of Paris as the diplomatic centre of the world—and it concluded its labours on the 17th September last. Thirty-four States, or Colonies, were represented: India, South Australia, New South Wales, and Tasmania, nominating their own delegates, distinct from the representatives of the Imperial Government of Great Britain, while Egypt, C. chin China, Siam, and Japan had each a suitable advocate of its interests.

The provisions agreed on by the Convention are fully set forth in eighty-seven sections (many of them comprising several paragraphs) and sixty-seven pages, while the Tariff (to take effect from July 1st) is so complete as to occupy between thirty and forty folio pages, of usual Blue-book size.

The singular exactitude and precision which characterise the language of France will long—probably for centuries—prevent its being ousted from its hitherto undisputed pre-eminence as the common language of all Europe: and, naturally enough, the "Protocol," as our continental neighbours call it, of the proceedings was drawn up in that tongue. The text is, in the volume before us, printed in parallel columns with a translation by Mr. Brasher, of the Indo-European Telegraph Department, which deserves very high praise. It may be thought by some that an official document—one, too, which, unlike diplomatic representations, contains, as does the present text, not a superfluous word—could be translated by "rule of thumb." But we assure such persons, if any there be, that even of the most precise, and least verbose, official documents, there are translations and translations.

By permission of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India in Council. London: Blackfriars Printing and Publishing Company. 1886.

That before us is most creditable to Mr. Brasher's abilities as a translator; and we say this with the more confidence because, having carefully compared the whole, we have not found a passage in which the combined brevity and lucidity of the original have not been faithfully reproduced.

THE ALPINE CLIMATE SERIES.*

Dr. Wise's reputation as a specialist in pulmonary affections is so well known that no work by him on the subject is likely to pass unheeded. The idea, that the comparative dryness and purity of the air of high altitudes cannot fail to be beneficial in septice disease, is not a new one, but is being worked out by many medical men of eminence in a manner never before systematically adopted. Maloja has a beautiful and eminently salubrious position on a mountain lake, and is surrounded by scenery of the most picturesque kind. For its many attractions we must refer the would-be visitor, in search of pleasure, or of the health without which pleasure cannot exist, to this excellent Handbook.

RELATIONS OF CLIENT AND SOLICITOR IN LEGAL AFFAIRS.†

The "learned professions" certainly have a good time of it in England; we are well known to be the most parson-ridden, lawyer-ridden, and doctor-ridden, nation in the world. This book is devoted to proving, by a certainly "strong" story, the truth of the impeachment as concerns the lawyers; and Mr. Routledge gives, in support of his allegations against the (nominally) inferior branch of the "Devil's Own," a narrative of facts which, if not unprofitable to read, must have been woefully unpleasant in their occurrence.

Even allowing for the involuntary colouring which usually tinges the narrative of an aggrieved man, we cannot but think that Mr. Routledge was exceptionally unfortunate in his experiences. However, as Mrs. Micawber was wont to observe, "experientia does it;" may ours and that of our readers differ from that of Mr. Routledge. The story is plainly told, and there is—names being, of course, omitted by him, as by the guests at Mrs. Henry Spiker's immortal dinner table—no lack of pièces justificatives, which enable one, on even a casual perusal, to form some opinion on the actual merits of the case.

COLONIAL AND INDIAN EXHIBITION.—The number of visitors to this Exhibition for the week ending June 19 was 252,633; total since the opening, 1,126,202. Arrangements have been made for the examination in the Indian Court of certain commercial products, which are believed to be insufficiently known or to be suitable for new purposes. Among the substances which will be examined are fibres, silk and silk substitutes, drugs, tobacco, gums, and resins, minerals, oils, oil seeds and perfumery, dyes, mordants and pigments, timbers, tanning materials and leather, and food stuffs. Any visitors to the Exhibition, who are interested in the subject, will be permitted to attend these examinations of products, which will take place in the Commercial Room, attached to the Economic Court, where all further information may be obtained. Should the results of this examination render such a course desirable, conferences of a formal character will probably be held at a later date.

THE Pioneer writes that the cry that has gone up over the armament of the artillery has always been understood to refer to the kind and not to the quality of the weapons. The 7-pounder field gun might be obsolete, but at all events it was a very good gun of its sort people believed. How are we to account, then, for the story that one of the crack mountain batteries, when it arrived at Calcutta recently from its station in the Punjab on the way to service in Burma, was suddenly discovered to be unserviceable as to its guns; that the officer commanding declined to run the responsibility of taking them into the field; and that after a great to-do the inspector-general of ordnance and the brigadier-general commanding acquiesced in their condemnation? Whatever may be the explanation of these things, we believe the guns in question are now to be seen in the arsenal at Fort William, the battery having sailed with a new equipment.

RAILWAY COMPANIES.

The seventy-third half-yearly general meeting of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company was held on Friday at the City Terminus Hotel. Colonel James Holland presided. In affixing the seal to the register of shareholders the chairman announced that their number at the present time was 13,963. In moving the adoption of the report the chairman stated that the receipts had increased 12½ per cent., the expenses 1½ per cent., and the profits 32 1-3 per cent. compared with the corresponding period of the previous year. That had brought the result up to within a very near point of the interest allowed by the Government of five per cent., and but for the continued depression in the exchange they would have made the full amount. With regard to the question of exchange, as he had said before, although they suffered apparently a very considerable loss by the exchange being so low, yet in point of fact the loss was made up by the stimulus given to the agricultural produce of the country, and the additional work which the company had therefore to do. It was, however, quite possible that when the present abnormal depression came to an end, and the rupee recovered to somewhat of its original value, they might derive considerably more profit than they did at present. Their terminal station at Bombay, which had taken several years to construct, was now practically finished. They had a much larger amount than usual standing at the debit of stores. They endeavoured to keep that item as low as they could, but in the present year it had been considerably increased, owing to the large amount of railway plant they had sent out, in anticipation of the final sanction of the Government being given to the doubling of the line from Bhopal to Kundwah and to Shegaum. With regard to the staple commodities, which formed the main source of their profit, he might state that the cotton crop, which had been very bad for the last year or two, had been decidedly better. Linseed was also better, though the crop would be scanty. Wheat was good. His colleague, Mr. Campbell, had prepared a statement which he thought would be regarded as very interesting. Out of 123,400 tons of wheat, which, by the latest returns from Bombay, had either been or were in process of being shipped for the last six weeks, 16,300 tons were for the United Kingdom, 55,400 tons for Italy, and 51,000 tons for the Continent. Many people were under the impression that they were dependent entirely, or to a very great extent, for the sale of their Indian wheat on the position of the American crops; but from the statement he had read it would seem that they were, to a very considerable extent, independent of the American crops. It would be very gratifying to the proprietors to know that the cultivation of wheat was increasing all along their system. Some writers on India wrote in a very doleful strain as to the masses being in a very impoverished state, notwithstanding the large increase in the export trade; but he thought that these gentlemen knew little, and had seen little of India, and that they knew nothing of the previous condition of things there. From his own personal experience and the information he had gathered from members of the Board who had been more recently in India, he would venture to say that, though India was a poor country, she was far richer than she was twenty years ago, that the toiling masses were far better off, and that the railway system was increasing the wealth of the country. As regarded the current half-year, which would end on the 30th inst., their agent thought that the profit would probably exceed that of the corresponding period of 1885 by £100,000, and, unless their predictions were very much falsified, they fully expected to pay a dividend of £1 4s. per cent. beyond the five per cent. guaranteed. In the corresponding period of 1885 the surplus dividend was £1 per cent. Mr. H. W. Blake seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously, and the retiring directors and auditor were subsequently re-elected.

The first ordinary half-yearly general meeting of the Indian Midland Railway Company (Limited) was held on Friday at the City Terminus Hotel. Colonel James Holland presided, and, in moving the adoption of the report, stated that a portion of the line was not only completed, but was actually working, and they were deriving a modest revenue from it. The section was some forty-two or forty-three miles long between the city of Cawnpore, where the East Indian Company had a station, and the river Jumna, on the line towards Jhansi, which would in all probability be the future headquarters of their railway. All of their lines but one were in course of construction, and the date for completing the last section was February, 1889. That was the line from Jhansi to Gwalior, which connected them with Agra. It was an important line, but not so important as the connection with Cawnpore, and the cause of the delay in its completion was attributable to the difficulties of construction. The line to Basoda was expected to be open by the 1st of June next year. There was nothing for him to qualify in the remarks made in the prospectus. Later surveys had shown that the distances were very nearly what had been stated, and they believed that their prospects were quite as good, both as regarded moderate cost of construction of the line and of profits thereafter. Mr. H. W. Blake seconded the motion, which was unanimously adopted, and a resolution was afterwards passed empowering the Board at any time to convert paid-up shares into stock.

THE BIRTHDAY GAZETTES.

[The Order of the Indian Empire was originated, I believe, as a reward for those who as non-officials were not eligible for the C.S.I. The officials have gradually managed to monopolise the new order themselves, adding the inferior to the superior or the superior to the inferior, quite impartially, so long as they get both. Looking down the two lists I find that Aitchison, Arbuthnot, Baring, Bayley, Burne, Couper, Cunningham, Davies, Ashley Eden, Egerton, Gibbs, Grant, Hobhouse Hope, Hunter, Ilbert, and dozens more on to the end of the alphabet, all bear the double decoration. So far as all classes but the covenanted civilians go, the C.I.E. has ceased to exist, and might as well be abolished. The way in which it has been distributed for the last few years affords perhaps the most successful example on record of official greed.]

They lay in snug official case
Beneath the tall deodar trees,
Where Simla's most delightful,
They say we'll have a charming day,
And some look'd sad and some look'd gay,
But all alike look'd spiteful.

For each one there had crept alone,
To watch the postman and to bone
A mark of Royal credit.
Still having met, they deem'd it best
To share the swag and d—the rest;
But this is how they said it—

"The fools who swelter in the plains
Have neither nous nor pluck nor brains!—
Be-ribbon'd and be-knighted!
Shall we up here, crème de la crème,
Give them a hand in this our game?"
"No! No!" cried all delighted.

For each one thought the other might Be decorated ere the night,
And what the deuce should he do?
So when the bag of honours came,
All grabb'd it for the same old game,
And all cried "Do as we do!"

Here's a C.I.E., and a C.S.I., and a C.I.E. for you.
And if you think one not enough, take two! take two!
—Times of India.

THE CALCUTTA TURF CLUB.

A proposal of great importance to all racing men in India was brought before the Calcutta Turf Club at an ordinary meeting held recently.

Mr. A. A. Apcar proposed, "That the present scale of weight for age of English horses be assimilated to the present scale of weight for age of Australian horses, so that the weight to be carried by English horses in January shall be the same as the weights to be carried by Australian horses in August, and so on, from month to month, the object being that English and Australian horses shall carry the same weight for their respective ages."

This highly important proposal was brought forward at a meeting at which only eight members were present. In ordinary course the matter comes on for consideration, and, if approved, for acceptance at the next meeting of the club which takes place in a few days. In view of the large interests at stake, Lord William Beresford intends to move the following amendment, namely, that Mr. Apcar's proposal may stand in abeyance, and not to be discussed till the annual general meeting, 1887, for the following reasons:—

I.—That the Calcutta Prospectus for 1886-87 has already been issued to the public.

II.—That on that prospectus owners have already made their arrangements and invested large sums of money.

III.—On account of the lateness of the season.

IV.—Mr. Apcar's proposal affects such a large interest that it cannot be too widely circulated and too carefully considered, and every facility ought to be given to enable as many members of the Calcutta Turf Club as possible to be present to vote on such an important and vital question.

The Bangalore Spectator states that Messrs. Arbuthnot and Company of Madras have arranged with the Eurasian Association to work the Kaolin beds at Whitefield, near Bangalore, on a large scale, importing plant and skilled labour from England. The Whitefield estate promises to become a flourishing manufacturing town.

As an instance of the rapid transmission of letters from the wilds of Central Asia, we may take the case of a letter received in Simla on 3rd instant from Colonel Lockhart, dated May 9th. This letter, written from near Gumbaz on the northern slopes of the Hindu Kush, was carried across that high range to Cabul direct, and thence sent on to Peshawur. Colonel Lockhart and the officers with him were in good health.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE replacement of all fuzes in Royal Artillery charge every five years has been ordered.

MAJOR C. T. ECHALAZ, General List, Infantry, has retired from the service on a pension of £365 per annum.

CAPTAIN H. T. FAITHFUL, 19th Punjab Infantry, has been ordered to Simla for employment in the Intelligence Branch.

MAJOR H. J. CHOLMELEY, 2nd Battalion Bedfordshire Regiment, has been granted five months' leave out of India on private affairs.

LIEUT.-COLONEL H. C. MARSH, Bengal Staff Corps, second in command 18th Bengal Cavalry, has retired from the service.

CAPTAIN J. H. VIVIAN, 2nd Battalion Scottish Rifles, has sent in his papers, and is now on leave pending retirement.

CAPTAIN C. M. FITZGERALD, Assistant Commissary-General, is about to proceed on sick leave to England.

THE supply of ordnance stores to the troops in the Belgaum District has been handed over to the Madras Ordnance Department. The supplies will in future be drawn from the Bellary arsenal.

MAJOR A. E. GARNAUT, Commanding B Battery, 4th Brigade, Royal Artillery, now on leave, has been promoted Lieutenant-Colonel, and posted to the Mauritius.

THE Government of India have ordered the re-formation of a Pay Office in Upper Burma, and has appointed Lieutenant Ramsden, Military Accounts Department, Paymaster. Lieutenant Ramsden officiated as Paymaster at Suakin.

THE relief of Lieutenants Beevor, Tanner, and Kelly, of the Military Works Department, now on service in Burma, by Lieuts. Lawrence, Hunter, and Rimington, Royal Engineers, lately from England, has been ordered.

THE name of the sanitarium formed in the Kawa Valley for the troops of the Quetta garrison has, on the recommendation of Sir Robert Sandeman, been changed from "Gwaski" to "Ziarat," by which name it will in future be known.

LIEUT.-COLONEL DE L. R. F. WOOLDRIDGE, S.C., 22nd Bombay Infantry, assistant commissary general for Transport, has been appointed to be deputy adjutant general, in succession to Colonel G. A. Green, whose tenure of appointment expired on the 31st March.

CAPTAIN H. C. WYLLY, 2nd Battalion Derbyshire Regiment, a proficient in the French language, has been selected to take charge of the three Japanese officers deputed to this country, two of them to learn the Native Army system, and the third, a doctor, to inquire into a certain disease said to be peculiar to India. Captain Wyllly has been granted an allowance of Rs. 150 per mensem while so employed.

THE contract allowances of Native cavalry regiments have been altered as follows:—The repair of arms allowance for Bombay regiments has been raised to Rs. 140 per mensem. In Bengal and Madras regiments the forge allowance per regiment has been fixed at Rs. 60 per mensem, and the Central India Horse has been granted a banker's allowance of Rs. 40 per regiment per mensem.

GENERAL MCQUEEN has been directed to take up the command of the Punjab Frontier Force forthwith. Brigadier-General Stewart, Madras Staff Corps, who has been appointed to succeed General McQueen in the command of the Hyderabad Contingent, will not come out from England till September, the officiating command being filled meantime by Colonel Way, the senior officer on the spot.

COLONEL MOORSON, who last November gave over command of the East Lancashire Regiment, in which he had served for thirty-one years, has been appointed to the charge of the Winchester Regimental District, in the place of the late Colonel Sturt. This is one of the best districts in the service. The troops to be looked after are the 37th Regiment (37th and 67th) and five Volunteer battalions. Colonel Moorson, having taken up his quarters near Portsmouth, was close at hand. He will be able to hold his new appointment for the full term of five years.

THE Income Tax has but limited application in an infantry regiment of Europeans, only the lieutenant-colonels and majors being liable to assessment, other officers in receipt of more than 500 rupees per mensem escaping the tax by the deduction of tentage. The following sums are held to be "tentage," and included in pay and allowances:—General officer, Rs. 400; brevet colonel and lieutenant-colonel, Rs. 200; lieutenant-colonel not brevet colonel, Rs. 150; major, Rs. 120; captain, Rs. 75; and lieutenant, Rs. 50. These sums are held to be included in the relative rank of other officers.

A RIFLE match between the Commander-in-Chief's Staff and the Simla Volunteers was shot off at Simla on Friday. The conditions were seven shots at 200 and 500 yards, and the scores as follows:—The Chief's team—Sir Frederick Roberts, 25 and 20; Colonel Pole-Carew, 29 and 25; Major Neville Chamberlain, 27 and 28; Captain Hamilton, 31 and 28; and Captain Hume, 31 and 28; totals, 143 and 129; grand total, 272. The Simla

Volunteers—Lieut. Bean, 29 and 31; Captain Chanter, 28 and 31; Captain Craigie Halkett, 31 and 20; Major Leigh, 20 and 24; Lieut. Lett, 30 and 29; totals, 147 and 135; grand total, 282. The volunteers thus won by ten points.

THE Educational Establishments for the Bengal Native Army have been altered consequent on the abolition of the Native Normal Training School at Umballa, and commanding officers are allowed to make their own arrangements in future for obtaining English schoolmasters. Cavalry—(a) An English (soldier) schoolmaster on Rs. 20 per mensem, in addition to the military pay of his rank, or a civilian on Rs. 25 per mensem; (b) a vernacular schoolmaster (who will also act as regimental moonshee) on Rs. 20 per mensem if a civilian, or on Rs. 7 per mensem if a soldier, in addition to the military pay of his rank. Infantry—(a) and (b) as in Cavalry; (c) a moulvie, pundit, or grunthi,—not more than two out of the three being allowed for one regiment—and no one of the three for any regiment having less than three companies of Mahomedans, Hindus, or Sikhs, as the case may be; the moulvie, or pundit, or grunthi will also act as assistant vernacular schoolmaster. The allowances for school sheds and for school books and stationery will remain as at present. This order is not applicable to the Punjab Frontier Force, or the local corps under the Government of India.

BY the bringing of all the military offices together at Simla in the new buildings, a scheme for minimising the various records by the adoption of one registration office, such as obtains in the case of the War Office and Horse Guards, has come under consideration. At present duplicate and triplicate records have often to be kept, which involves a large clerical staff; and inquiry at Simla is now being directed into the cost of the record branches of the various departments, to see if by a new plan such reductions can be made as will justify the formation of one registration office. General Chapman, Colonel Collett, Colonel Ojlen, and Major Robertson as a committee are now making the preliminary inquiry. The main difficulty is that from army headquarters camp offices only are taken to the plains in winter, but it seems likely that the Military Department will also only take camp offices in future, in which case all the offices could come under roof in Calcutta, and a system of combined registration be consistently carried out.

A GLORIOUS EXAMPLE.—A serious theft in a public building recently occurred in one of the inland provinces of China. The thief was arrested, and this is how the authorities deal with the case. They propose to subject the man to further examination with a view to ascertaining whether he had any accomplices, and as soon as the case has been determined they will proceed to denounce to His Majesty the officials to whose laxity of supervision the theft was due.

JUBBULPORE, says an Allahabad paper, is about to furnish another little scandal for the delectation of Indian society. The affair is a matter of everyday talk in the station, but we are not at liberty to say more at present than that the lady is the mother of several children, and that the Lethario is a young, rather good looking bachelor. The case comes on shortly in the North-Western Provinces High Court at Allahabad. Mr. Stanyon, barrister-at-law, of Jubbulpore, has been retained by one of the parties.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.—Yesterday afternoon the sixty-first half-yearly general meeting of this railway was held at the Cannon-street Hotel. Major-General J. S. Trevor occupied the chair. The report having been taken as read, the Chairman, in moving its adoption, congratulated the shareholders on the prosperous condition of the railway. The Board had been able to pay 10s. per share in addition to the guaranteed interest, and that in spite of the further fall in the value of the rupee of nearly a penny, or 5½ per cent.—(cheers). This result was due to good management. They had not suffered from any interruption of their traffic, and they had now completed the alteration of their goods waggons, which would carry ten tons of paying load instead of eight tons. In the half-year they had carried over 400,000 tons of food grain, half of which was wheat, and they had also carried 170,000 tons of salt. These goods were carried at very low rates. This railway carried passengers at about quarter the price charged in England, and goods at the rates prevalent in the United States in 1883. The Board was very well satisfied with the coaching traffic, having carried more passengers than any other railway in India. The available total for dividend was £37,751 10s., and that would allow of a total distribution for the half-year on the capital stock of the company of £3 per cent.—(cheers). With regard to the future, he thought they might be able, at the next meeting, to declare a dividend of £4 1s. 6d. or £4 2s. for the half-year.—(cheers).—Mr. Samuel J. Wilde seconded the motion, which was agreed to, and the dividend declared.—A resolution to enable the directors to deal with some invested funds belonging to the company so as to use the money in the interests of their employes, was also agreed to.—Major General Trevor and Mr. Wilde were re-elected directors, and Mr. G. H. Harris, the retiring auditor, was also re-elected.—The proceedings then terminated.

THE INDIAN BUDGET DEBATE.

"A BIGGARLY account of empty benches" was the spectacle which the House of Commons presented on Monday evening last in going into Committee on the East India Revenue Accounts. The Indian Budget has never been an attraction to draw honourable members from their dinner or some equally absorbing pursuit, but upon the present occasion Mr. S. Howard had to lift up his voice in lamentation that the listeners to the tale he had to unfold were so few. "If," said he, "we had been called upon to discuss this question at this time under ordinary circumstances I think that we might have taken it as a proper recognition of the importance of the subject; but even under the present circumstances it seems from the state of the benches that there must be some attraction outside the House as great as the 12th of August is supposed to be upon ordinary occasions."

This melancholy reference to the superior attractions of the opening day of grouse-shooting to that possessed by the opening of the Indian Budget time may have raised a sigh or laugh, but the painstaking official went steadily through his uncongenial task. If any of the reformers who wish to do away with the Secretary of State's Indian Council and have Indian affairs left altogether to the tender mercies of Parliament have ever been present in the House on an Indian Budget night, we wonder whether they have gone away strengthened in their opinion that such a change was desirable?

The task of Mr. Howard was not an easy one, for he first had to apologise for the form in which the accounts were presented—a form characterised by Mr. J. M. Maclean "speaking from rather a long experience of examination into Indian accounts," as one of a most complicated and forbidding nature, and most perplexing to the English mind. Mr. Maclean very properly thought that it would be a great advantage to have a much simpler form of presenting these accounts "that would not be above the level of the average member of Parliament." The "average member of Parliament" is, however, a Gallio in these matters, except when, like Mr. S. Smith, he has had the misfortune of having made a winter tour in India for the purpose of collecting "facts." He then comes back to Parliament full of that little learning which is a dangerous thing. But with a daring which the angels would shrink from, but which lesser spirits delight in, he tells the House or the reporter's gallery that "personal inquiry in India had convinced him that the Natives almost universally felt the greatest dissatisfaction with regard to British rule." This was the strain which the honourable member for Flint indulged in on Monday evening, and to which the few who were present in the House were obliged to listen. Mr. Smith found that the peasantry of India were poorly fed and scantily clothed. A diet of rice and a slender covering of cotton evidently shocked him, and so he demanded Home Rule as the panacea for the ills of this unhappy people.

He foresaw that in the course of twenty or thirty years we should have in India a second Ireland—an Irish difficulty on a gigantic scale—unless the policy of this country underwent modification. One remedy he suggested was to give effective expression to the feelings of the people of India in the government of India. They had no such expression at present. They were ruled as children.

Certain honourable members took upon themselves to try and answer Mr. Smith according to his folly, but the folly of the average member lives after him and is made much use of outside Parliament to try and bring into discredit British rule in India. And yet the story of that rule, as told in these annual Budgets, which empty Parliamentary benches, is one of material progress and prosperity which speaks of a just, enlightened and generous Government. If the figures of expenditure which catch the eye seem great, the results which are not seen are apt to be doubted or derided by the ignorant or the mischievous. But to those who care to learn the truth and the whole truth those results are matters of fact for Englishmen to be proud of and grateful for in considering the cares, the dangers and the responsibilities which British rule in India involves. Even Sir George Campbell, who croaks against most of the decrees of Providence does not altogether despair of India under English Government. But Mr. Maclean, and those who bring unprejudiced minds to the aid of their experience, can see, without taking too roseate a view, a future for India in which prosperity, contentment, and comfort among the people will reconcile them to even "increased taxation." He pointed out one way, amongst others, in which this can be accomplished, viz., by the extension of productive railways:—

There ought to be no spasmodic system. It ought to be consistent, steady, and comprehensive. A little boldness, a little energy, and a little consistency in the construction of these productive railways in India would be of the greatest possible benefit to the people of that country.

SIR CHARLES E. TREVELYAN, K.C.B.

SIR CHARLES E. TREVELYAN, the fourth son of the Venerable George Trevelyan, Archdeacon of Taunton, was born in 1807, and educated at the Charterhouse. After passing through Haileybury he joined the East India Company's service in 1826. Early in the following year he was appointed First Assistant to the Resident at Delhi, where, to quote his own words, "he soon began to perceive indications that were not to be mistaken of the existence of a system of corruption grounded on the Resident's own participation in it." Hot, fiery, and indefatigable, the "boy" civilian resolved to expose the discreditable transactions which he could not countenance, and lay bare infamies calculated to bring discredit upon the service which he had just entered. Pressure, alike social and official, was brought to bear upon the bold and fearless stripling, but conscious of right he stood to his ground, and in the end he came forth from the contest a proud victor. His chief was dismissed from his post, and declared "unworthy of the confidence of Government and unfit for further employment," while his subordinate elicited a warm expression of the approbation with which Government had viewed his conduct. With high magnanimity, young Trevelyan, when asked by Lord William Bentinck, then the Governor-General of India, to name his reward, suggested that something might be done for his elder brother, at the time an officer in the Company's military service. This was done; but the nobleman in question, who, in the words of Lord Macaulay, had "always given to Trevelyan the strongest marks, not of a blind partiality, but of a thoroughly well-grounded and discriminating esteem," soon found an opportunity of rewarding the "stormy reformer" who had laid bare the corruptions in high places at Delhi. Ere long the Under Secretaryship in the Foreign Department came as a fitting reward for the troubles and anxieties of a four years' residence at the Court of the Great Mogul. During his tenure of this new office Trevelyan made his mark by his report on the transit duties, by which the internal trade of the country had long been fettered.

In 1834 he married Hannah More Macaulay, the sister of the late Lord Macaulay, then Legal Member of the Governor-General's Council. Matrimony did not in the least soften the rough fearlessness with which he attacked, root and branch, all of which he disapproved, or which he deemed capable of amendment. At one time he advocated most rigorously, and in trenchant minutes, the substitution of the Roman for the Native alphabet in the study of Oriental languages. Wrong as we deem him in this effort, to deny his vigour and force of argument would be at once idle and unfair. At another time he stands forth as the champion of the languages of Europe as a fitting medium of education for the people of India. The question was referred to a committee, the members of which were so evenly balanced in opinion that a deadlock ensued, only to be terminated by the interference of Government, who supported the reformer from Delhi. As a consequence, the president resigned, and made way for his younger companion, whose ardour and impetuosity had carried the day.

Thus, ever tilting against somebody and something, he passed four eventful years of his life till, in 1838, the time came for rest. So he turned his back upon the scenes of his struggles and triumphs, and went to England on furlough. But he was not destined to resume his labours in the service of "John Company," for a vacancy having occurred in the Assistant Secretaryship of the Treasury by the retirement of Sir Alexander Spearman, the Government of Lord Melbourne conferred the appointment upon Trevelyan. He assumed the office in January, 1840, and held it for the lengthened period of nineteen years. For a while he remained but little known beyond the circle of those who daily came in contact with the permanent Chief of the Treasury, but in 1845-47 the great Irish Famine burst upon the country, and necessitated Government interference. Then Trevelyan's great administrative powers found full sway, and he soon became the "keystone" of the gigantic relief works inaugurated by Government—works so gigantic, indeed, that in one month no less than three million souls found daily labour and daily food at the hands of the State.

For his remarkable services during those three trying years he was nominated a Knight Commander of the Order of the Bath.

The next great work which he took in hand was the inquiry into the "Organisation of the Permanent Civil Service," and the joint Report which bears the name of Sir Stafford Northcote and Sir Charles Trevelyan was the harbinger of a new system of competition instead of patronage. Whether the change was an unmixt blessing, as some ardent reformers contend, or a thinly-veiled curse, as others would have it believed, is immaterial to the purposes of this memoir. It is enough that the scheme was the result of careful inquiry and considerate thought; and none could grudge its authors the meed of praise which fearless independence and rigid fidelity to principles and the dictates of conscience rarely fail to secure.

But the wheel of Fortune had higher employment in store for him, and in March, 1859, the "boy" from Delhi had developed into Governor of Madras. Still the same spirit of outspokenness possessed Sir Charles Trevelyan, and after little more than a year he published a protest against the financial measures of Mr. Wilson, the Finance Minister, with his "three tremendous taxes," the Income-tax amongst the number. Lord Canning, who was then absent in Northern India, returned to Calcutta to vindicate his authority, and resent the official insubordination which had prompted the publication of a document which should not have been allowed to see the light of day. The Government in power could not overlook the action of the subordinate Presidency in this matter; and in June, 1860, Sir Charles Trevelyan once again bade adieu to the shores of the Queen's Eastern Empire; but he carried with him the good wishes of the many for whom he had laboured and toiled, and the "high appreciation" of Her Majesty's Government served to soothe the asperity and harshness of a recall from high station and exalted position.

Time was not long in bringing to Sir Charles the reward of honest service and conscientious toil. Two brief years of repose again found him in harness; this time (1862) as Finance Minister, in succession to Mr. Samuel Laing, the present chairman of the London and Brighton Railway. On his arrival in India he found the—to him obnoxious—Income-tax in force for five years, of which a portion had still to run. Against its renewal he fought, and fought successfully, preferring a tax on certain articles of export; but though the finances were temporarily in deficit, the Secretary of State refused his consent to this latter means of raising revenue, and, for the second time in his career, Sir Charles Trevelyan failed to obtain the support of his superiors in England.

In 1865 he resigned his appointment on the ground of ill-health, but only to throw himself with all the ardour of his nature into the discussion of the question of "Army Reform;" and when this burning question was removed from the scene a varied and divergent array of social questions gave employment to his fertile brain and busy pen. A staunch Liberal in politics he received his reward at the hands of his party, and in 1874 was created a Baronet, as a recognition of his long and distinguished public services.

It only remains to add that Sir Charles's first wife died in 1873, her place being supplied, after an interval of two years, by a daughter of Mr. Walter Campbell, of Islay, who survives her husband.

Regarding the niche in the temple of fame to be assigned to Sir Charles Trevelyan it is not easy to decide. That he was sans peur et sans reproche, of spotless and unsullied integrity, is beyond all question or doubt. No danger daunted him, no fear of consequences frightened him. Come what may he never quailed or held back in the discharge of a duty or the fulfilment of a task. But to our judgment he was too much tinged with the doctrinaire school so prevalent in this our day. He revelled in facts, and made no allowances for the peculiarities—perhaps it might be written the infirmities—of poor fallen nature. Some of his theories were doubtless sound, but equally not a few are open to question. Cold and unimpassioned as regards the interests of those around him he never took pains to conciliate a foe or appease an antagonist; so it is almost needless to assert that he was more dreaded than beloved. But he did good, honest service, and be the results of his career what they may, the public will always honour the memory of him who did his best to honour the Service to which he belonged, and set a noble example of fearless championship of the right, and uncompromising opposition to the wrong.

THE Parsee community are taking measures for increasing the efficacy of their existing agencies for promoting female education. The difficulty of supplying female teachers for the schools under the management of the Girls' School Association has of late been increasingly felt, and funds are now being raised for establishing a normal class, through which all the more advanced pupils will be passed, and from which the teachers will be recruited from time to time as may be required. It is expected that the advantages of the arrangement will be twofold. It will dispense with the necessity of sending pupils qualifying for teachers to schools belonging to other communities—an advantage which, whatever estimate may be formed of it by outsiders, the Parsees are anxious to have and willing to pay for. And it will send into Parsee society a constant draft of young women who have received the best education, special and general, that specially chosen teachers can supply them with, including a thorough knowledge of English, which there is some difficulty of obtaining under the present management of the Association. This is carrying a step further the great work begun a generation ago by the late Mr. Nowrozjee Furdoonjee, Mr. Framjee Nasserwanjee Patel, Mr. Bengali and other pioneers of social and intellectual progress in the community, and it deserves to succeed.

A DICTIONARY OF ISLAM.

Being a Cyclopædia of the Doctrines, Rites, Ceremonies, and Customs, together with the Technical and Theological Terms, of the Muhammadan Religion.

BY

THOMAS PATRICK HUGHES, B.D. M.R.A.S.

Fellow of the Punjab University, Missionary of the Church Missionary Society, Peshawur, Afghanistan.

"We have at last obtained a real encyclopædia of the Muhammadan Religion, and we can only hope that the sterling value of the result of so much labour and study will receive its well-merited recognition."—Literary World.

"An excellent service has been rendered by Mr. Hughes in compiling this Dictionary of Islam to all those who have dealings with Moslems, Islam, or the literature of one man, is a marvel of industry, and fairly to be characterised as a cyclopædia of the doctrines, rites, ceremonies, and customs; together with the technical and theological terms of the Muhammadan religion."—Saturday Review.

"Mr. Hughes' competency for his task can fully be judged only by those as familiar with Muhammadanism as he is himself. He indicates great care and sound judgment. . . . We have read many of its articles with great interest."—British Quarterly Review.

"The work is unique of its kind, and invaluable to all who live in, or love the East."—Daily Telegraph.

"In the 750 pages of his present work he gives an exact explanation of every term, action, and idea of the Mussalman faith, the information being in every case taken from the most esteemed Muhammadan sources, with the comments of the best European scholars. . . . This most useful work will be of undoubted value to the student of comparative religion."—Home and Mail.

A GAZETTEER

OF THE

TERRITORIES UNDER THE GOVERNMENT

OF THE

VICEROY OF INDIA.

BY

EDWARD THORNTON.

REVISED AND EDITED BY

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE, C.I.E.

(Formerly Press Commissioner in India, &c.)

AND

ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E.,

H.M. INDIAN (HOME) SERVICE.

(Translator of the Anvár-i-Suhaili, &c.)

WHEN Thornton's "Gazetteer of India" was originally presented to the public, it was the only compilation of its kind, and it was obviously desirable that, within reasonable limits, the work should be sufficiently comprehensive to give the reader some insight into the history of the various localities enumerated. Since that date, however, Hunter's "Imperial Gazetteer" has been prepared, which is not only much more ample than its predecessor, but is still to be greatly enlarged in the New Edition now in course of production. In these circumstances it has been thought incumbent, when issuing a New Edition of Thornton's "Gazetteer" corrected up to date, to modify in some measure the plan of the work by omitting much of the retail, and giving only such leading facts and figures as will suffice for ordinary purposes of reference, a plan which has the additional advantage of reducing the work to one moderate-sized volume.

It is obvious that the value of the New Edition must depend in a large measure upon the care and judgment which have been exercised in the preparation of the letter-press. The task was, in the first instance, undertaken by Sir Roper Lethbridge, whose literary attainments and acquaintance with India were considered to qualify him to a marked degree for an undertaking demanding considerable knowledge and experience. In order, further, to render the work as complete and perfect as is possible, the Publishers deemed it prudent to subject the pages to the scrutiny of a second Editor, in the person of Mr. Arthur N. Wollaston, whose lengthened experience gives to his criticism an unusual degree of weight and importance. The joint names which appear on the title-page will, it is hoped, serve as a guarantee to the public that the "Gazetteer" is in the main accurate and trustworthy, free alike from sins of omission and commission. It will be found to contain many hundreds of place not included in any former edition, while the areas and populations have been revised by the data given in the Census Report of 1881.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

A MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) discovered a REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This is necessary, as many persons have been deceived by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he is entitled to say it had been so. See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."

From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London. DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, are fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUM

PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUBSTANTIAL IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. Is. 1jd., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.
W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pearls and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by day-light, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.
